Stuart came out into the street feeling that his part of the evening's work had been very insignificant. He had, in fact, been almost ignored in the excitement and had sat a silent spectator of the affair. He was calm enough to realize that the doctor's abrupt statement, combined with the great love the miners had for him, had a great deal to do with the way the matters were being shaped. The crowd still remained in the streets, but it was broken up into groups, discussing the situation and wondering what the owners would do now.

Stuart was standing by the doctor's cutter, waiting for him to return, when a man touched him on the arm. He turned, and there stood Eric. He had run nearly all the way from Champion, but Stuart did not know that.

"Eric!" cried Stuart.

"I got here just in time to be of no use," said Eric gloomily. Then he added, with more feeling, "You are not hurt?"

"No. There has been no disturbance. You've heard that the strike is declared off? How did you come over?"

SPREAD BY ANIMALS.

Diseases That Are Common to Men and Horses and Cows Communicated by the Latter.

The subject of the relationship between the diseases to which man is liable and those from which animals suffer is very interesting and important, and will well repay the study now being given to it by physicians and veterinary surgeons. These diseases, says Youth's Companion, may be divided into three classes—those equally affecting both man and animals, those special to man, but which may also be caught by animals, and those belonging to animals, but which may attack man if he comes in close contact with the sick animal.

Of those equally affecting both man and animals the best known is tuberculosis. Some physicians insist that the tuberculosis of cows is not the same as that of human beings, but most are of the opinion that the differences between the two diseases are only such as might be expected to exist in view of the vital differences between the two classes of beings.

Another disease common to men and some animals is smallpox. In this case there seems to be more difference between the disease in man—smallpox, and that in animals—cowpox and horsepox. Yet that the two affections are closely related is shown by the protection against smallpox that is afforded us by inoculation with cowpox, or vaccination.

Diphtheria and scarlet fever are shared with us by various animals, and it has been asserted by certain English physicians that these diseases may be conveyed to children in the milk from sick cows. However this may be, there is little doubt that cats, rabbits and perhaps other domestic animals, can acquire diphtheria from sick children, and can in turn transmit it to healthy children.

The plague is a disease common to man, monkeys and rodents, and is so equally shared by them that no one knows whether it was primarily a human disease or a rat pest.

Among the diseases belonging especially to animals, but which may also be contracted by men, are hydrophobia, anthrax or malignant pustule, glanders and foot-and-mouth disease.

Some of the parasitic skin diseases are also transmissible from men to animals, and the reverse. A very common example of this is ringworm, which is not infrequently introduced among the children of a family by the cat.

Asparagus, Spanish Style.

Tie the stalks, from which the coarse scales have been removed, in a bunch, and cook, standing upright with the tips out of the water, until tender. Place in a hot dish, add two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice or vinegar to the water (which should be slightly salted) and in it poach as many eggs as will be required. Mix one-quarter teaspoonful of salt, a few grains of pepper and four tablespoonfuls melted butter; then add gradually two tablespoonfuls of lemon juice and vinegar. Place the eggs over the asparagus, and pour the sauce over the whole. Serve hot.—Home Magazine.

A Desirable Acquaintance.

Mrs. Hoon—I cannot for the life of me understand why it is that that stupid, absent-minded Mr. Boubler is so popular with all you men?

Mr. Hoon—Oh, he has such a poor memory that he cannot recollect a good story long enough to repeat it to anyone else, and, having forgotten it, he is just as ready to listen to it the second time as he was at first.—Judge.

"A lady customer, seeing the remedy exposed for sale on my show case, said to me: "I really believe that medicine saved my life the past summer while at the shore, and she became so enthusiastic over its merits that I at once made up my mind to recommend it in the future. Recently a gentleman came into my store so overcome with colic pains that he sank at once to the floor. I gave him a dose of this remedy which helped him. I repeated the dose and in fifteen minutes he left my store smilingly informing me that he felt as well as ever." Sold by W. A. Schreiter druggist.

Vic's Letter.

Calamba, P. I., April 5th, 1901.

Editor Gazette.

I will write you a few lines to let you know how we are getting along.

I suppose that by this time the surrender or capture of Aguinaldo is a thing of the past. Well with the American soldiers it will ever live. Every native soldier who was in the service of the U. S. to help capture Aggie got bounty money viz: to each native sargeant $100 gold: to each corporal, $75; and to each private, $50 and a 20 days' furlough to all natives, while the American soldiers who were with them got nothing. A great injustice we think. More than that one of them celebrating the joyful event of the capture in which he had participated missed several calls and was confined to the guard house. It is rumored here today that Aggie has signed the Oath of Allegiance to the U. S. and he will soon, no doubt, get a political job where the soldiers who once fought against him will have to bow to him in honor and respect.

Today five natives were hung in this town. While the sentence as executed was just it was a pitiful sight. The five were executed for the murder of the President of this town about a year ago The scaffold on which they were hung was the one used for several others. Only a few days ago the five murderers of Archie Wilson, (whose death was published in The Gazette) were hung in Manila. The hanging was public, at 9:30 a.m., the prisoners left the guard house for the scaffold, a distance of two hundred yards. They were all handcuffed to one another and rode in an ambulance from the hospital. On reaching the scaffold they were met by a Philippino priest and were given fifteen minutes for prayer. Five soldiers adjusted the ropes and black-caps, while one held a prisoner who was fainting. At 10:05 a. m. the trap was pulled at a signal given by 1st Lieut. Jones of the 8th Infantry, and five men swung for the life of one. Hardly a Philippino was in sight who did not shed tears, and it was sad to see the children of the men to be hung holding up crucifixes to their fathers on the scaffold and crying "Ta Ta" or in American papa. They hung for twenty minutes before they were pronounced dead by 1st. Lieut. Williamson, Surgeon U. S. A.

During the time the execution was going on, the sentries at the guardhouse suffered two prisoners to escape, one being an insurgent and the other a supposed spie for the Insurgents. Both had good sentences to serve and it is likely they will not give themselves up very easily if found. It is said that they secured arms before leaving. One corporal and two privates of Co. G 8th Infantry are held to blame for their escape and will most likely be tried and get severe sentences. It was according to all reports largely their fault, as they neglected their duty to watch the hanging, one private was found off from his post.

These natives were hung on Good Friday.

This is all for this time. "Vic."

Accordingly last Sunday a meeting was held after mass to further the project. The plans are to proceed at once with the erection of a school building, so as to have all in readiness for the fall term to open in September.

The Rev. Fayolle will push the matter to a conclusion and we may confidently expect that the new institution will be a credit and benefit to the city.

All Doctors have tried to cure Catarrh by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of Catarrh, has at last perfected a treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures Catarrh, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "Snuffles the guaranteed Catarrh Cure" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"Snuffles" is the only perfect Catarrh Cure ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve Hay Fever or Cold in the Head.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER;

Or, Christian Stewardship.

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

Author of "In His Steps," "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong," "Robert Hardy's Seven Days," "Malcom Kirk," Etc.

COPYRIGHT, 1896, BY CONGREGATIONAL AND SUNDAY SCHOOL PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

"Yes, I heard the news quick enough. I came on foot. I will never trust a crowd again. I thought I knew these men. I would have sworn nothing could prevent their pulling up the pumps tonight. That shows how little I have really known them."

"We thank the doctor for the way things have turned. You never heard such a talk as he gave the men."

"No, and you never will again," said the doctor as he came up and began to untie Ajax. "It was my first and will be my last on the stage. I wouldn't have gone up this time only I wanted to tell the good for nothing lot of them what fools they are. I seldom have such a chance to say so to as large a number of them at once. Come on. Going back to Champion with me, Stuart?"

"Wait a minute, doctor!" cried Stuart. He drew Eric off one side. "Eric, you came over on purpose to share the danger with me. I know what it means." Eric did not answer. "You are not feeling the injustice of the men toward you. Don't let it make you bitter. The cause is the same." Still Eric was silent. "Won't you go back with us? The doctor can make room."

"No; I'll stay over here with some friends. I'll be back tomorrow," Eric replied as if with an effort.

Stuart laid a hand on his shoulder. "Eric," he said simply, "I love you."

Eric choked. In the darkness a tear rolled down over his cheek. He turned away and walked into the street, and Stuart went back to Champion with the doctor.

"Eric takes it hard; his loss of influence over the men," said Stuart, with a sigh.

"Put not your trust in the mob," replied the doctor shortly.

When they drove back into the square at Champion, the lights in the Salvation Army hall were shining out a welcome. To Stuart it seemed as if the old weather beaten building was glorified. Whatever the outcome of that night's action on the part of the miners, he felt that he had a place in the love of one person, who, believing in him and his desire to be true to his brother, would share with him the burden and responsibility and privilege that awaited them under this new turn of affairs. Between this man and woman had now sprung up a mutual faith each in the other which made possible for them much of the great work that lay before them. Rhena dated from that night when her lover risked his life, as they both thought, at the call of duty, a new and sacred respect and attachment for him.

The next few days in Champion and De Mott were full of excitement. The men flocked back to the mines and gathered about the little offices of the mine captains up on the hills by the engine houses. The Cleveland owners had as yet made no movement to open up again. The captains on the De Mott ranges were waiting every hour for orders. Stuart was independent so far as his own action was concerned, and, true to his promise made so long ago, he at once posted notices that he would give all the men yet on the pay roll of the Champion mines $2 a day. In a week he had more applicants than he could employ. He at once took steps to open up some new shafts which had been begun by his father. This enlarged his force of men by 500, but the men from De Mott came over in crowds, and he was not able to employ a fifth part of them. He knew that he had made enemies of the other owners, and he anticipated a move on their part to ruin him commercially, but the longer they held out and refused to open up or grant the $2 a day Stuart was practically in a position to gain many markets once closed to him. The demand for ore was growing more imperative. As it happened also, the Champion mines were producing a very superior grade of ore, and Stuart could afford to pay the $2 in any case, whether the other mines were worked or not.

A man touched him on the arm.

As a matter of history, the whole outcome of the matter was as follows: The De Mott range did not open up in full for two weeks. The Cleveland owners, after doing all in their power to coerce Stuart, finding that every day only placed him, owing to the peculiar condition of the trade, in a better position, finally opened up a few mines at a 10 per cent rise on previous wages. This almost led to another strike and a formation of the union again. But the long winter, the long idleness, so unusual to the men, the great loss they had sustained, had their effect, and the De Mott men began to go back a few at a time. This led to a singular condition of affairs in the iron region, never before known. Nearly 1,500 men were receiving $2 a day at Champion, while on the lower range twice as many men were working for $1.40.

At the end of two months, however, with the opening up of the lake navigation, ore went up with such a bound that De Mott ranges advanced wages to $2, and the men at last actually received, largely through Stuart's firmness in holding out, the amount they had originally demanded. But there was no great demonstration over the fact. The strike had been too costly. The suffering had left its mark on every home, and the men were not in a condition when the rise in wages finally came to spend much enthusiasm over it.

Long before this had come about Stuart and Rhena had planned for their new life together.

One day very soon after Champion mines had opened the two were out looking at the new cottages going up in Cornishtown. The work had been pushed hard, and at last satisfactory results were being seen. Most of the houses would be ready for use in a fortnight. After looking on and directing some special part of the settlement Stuart asked Rhena to go up the trail with him to the old stump where he had first told her he loved her.

When they reached the place, they turned to look down at the town. It was winter still. The snow lay deep in all the valley. The sound of the workmen came up to them from Cornishtown. The engine stacks were smoking all over the range. All the ore stock piles were dotted over with busy moving figures.

Stuart said something about the site being a good one for a house.

"I don't know but I shall put up a little cottage on this stump, and we could begin housekeeping on a modest scale, like the rest of the people down there. What do you think of that?"

"But wouldn't we be putting ourselves above them to come up here?" asked Rhena slyly.

"No; we would simply be in a position to see all of them and be better able to help them in case of need."

"I don't think the stump is quite large enough for a foundation," said Rhena very soberly, though she was very happy. "After I had opened the front door I would have to go outside to shut it again."

"You are very hard to suit, madam," replied Stuart. "What will you have? A palace? A marble pile? I thought a Salvation Army lass would be ready to put up with almost anything."

"Stuart"—Rhena spoke with real seriousness—"I could be happy with you in one of the cottages down there, and you and I know that together. The army is very dear to me. I cannot leave it."

"I do not ask you to," replied Stuart, smiling. "I first fell in love with your bonnet, and I hope you will wear it at the wedding."

"I am thinking of the poor men and women I have been living with so long," continued Rhena. Her great eyes filled with tears. "I can't bear to have them think that because I am going to be the wife of the mine owner and live in his house I am going to be lifted so far away from them that they will— Stuart, you know what I mean. If I didn't believe so completely in you and your thought of stewardship of God's property, I would never dare marry you, a man with all this money and master of such a house. I cannot even think of the selfish surroundings of my life without a shudder.

"We need great wisdom to use God's blessings. It will be a joy to us to work out the problem together, won't it?"

Stuart said something so softly that, with the exception of Rhena, only a snowbird on a fir tree near by heard it, and the snowbird never told.

They talked for awhile about their approaching marriage. It was to be the following week.

"Louise and Aunt Royal are going to New York the first of the week. My only regret, Rhena, is in being unable to reconcile them to us. We move in a different world from theirs."

"You have done all you could, I am sure, Stuart," replied Rhena gently. She was thinking of another matter. Finally she asked, almost timidly: "The army has asked me if I expected to be married in the church. Would you mind, Stuart, if we were married in the old hall?"

"No," said Stuart. He was and always had been indifferent to the particular forms and ceremonies of life, even the old life from which he was now emancipated, and he understood Rhena's reason for this request. She belonged to the army, and the little squad of officers and privates was very dear to her. She longed to assure them in every way possible that her marriage had not in any way removed them from her in sympathy.

So one evening about a week after the departure of Louise and Aunt Royal Stuart went down to Eric's cottage and met Andrew and the doctor there. Together they went over to Rhena's lodging, and presently she came out dressed in the army costume, that Stuart said was the best and most becoming for her to wear. She took his arm, and, with Eric and the doctor and Andrew marching behind, they stepped over to the hall.

The army was in great excitement. It had paraded the streets, held its outdoor meeting and was back at the hall to welcome the bride and groom. The little band stood just outside, and what it lacked in numbers it made up in muscle. The big drum had never received such a vigorous beating as it received that night. The tambourines would certainly have been knocked into small pieces if they had not been made of very tough material. And "Scaly Joe," now known as "Witnessing Joseph," would surely have blown himself through the holes of his flute if he had not been possessed of a pair of lungs that could be almost indefinitely expanded.

Outside the hall, standing about in a great crowd, were the miners of Champion. They greeted the little bridal party with hearty cheers as it came up, and as soon as the band had finished and Stuart and Rhena, Andrew and Eric and the doctor had gone in they crowded after, filling up the old room until it could not hold another person.

There were a good many brief prayers and several rousing songs as the army took its place on the platform. The major, also carried away by the greatness of the occasion, made a rattling speech, punctured with frequent amens and hallelujahs from the rest of the army. The collection was not forgotten, and as it was an occasion out of a lifetime and the men were getting wages again the tambourines were heavy with silver, and the major began to think of putting up suitable headquarters at once.

Finally the noise ceased, and Andrew read the marriage service, Rhena and Stuart standing in the middle of the platform, Eric and the doctor a little one side and behind Stuart. This part of the ceremony was not strictly according to Salvation Army rules, but "everything goes tonight," as "Witnessing Joseph" said in a few remarks after the collection. Andrew's prayer was full of beauty and power. "That was almost as good a prayer as some we have here in the hall confession nights," said the major afterward. The whole ceremony was very impressive to Stuart in spite of the surroundings and the army exercises that accompanied them, for he felt in it all that this woman standing by his side in this costume, which had become dear to a sin sick and body suffering humanity, was the woman who was to walk hand in hand with him through life with all these people now crowded into the hall, the largest factor in both their experiences, and it seemed to him specially appropriate that they should solemnize the most sacred event of their lives in the presence of those whom they had begun to help and regard as truly belonging to the great brotherhood in the family which is one in God the Father.

They had planned to remain some time after the service was over to shake hands with the men. But the crowd outside was clamoring to get in, and finally, at the major's suggestion, the men filed up to the platform, shook hands, offered their greetings and went down the other side of the aisle and out of the hall. The men outside soon learned of this arrangement and formed a line that reached out into the square, past the band stand, and before Stuart and Rhena knew what the major had arranged they were facing a stream of miners that bade fair to keep them standing there two or three hours.

"Can you stand it, Mrs. Duncan?" asked Stuart, looking into the blushing face, which never looked so beautiful in its army bonnet as tonight.

"You forget, sir, that I have stood in this hall a good many long hours this winter. I feel quite confident of tiring you out. Isn't it beautiful of them? This is worth more, Stuart, than all the fashion and parade of society, for these people love us, and we know it."

"Aye, aye," replied Stuart proudly, happy of his wife's health and strength and Christian beauty. "'That belongs to be.' It is worth a million times more to us than all the gingerbread trimmings of society fashionable weddings."

Meanwhile the doctor, Andrew and Eric disappeared. When Stuart and Rhena finally came out after receiving the men and after a closing volley of shouts and drumbeats from the army, they found the three men by the side of a two seated cutter trimmed with spruce boughs. The doctor motioned them to take the back seat.

"What," cried Stuart, "you here yet, doctor? I thought sure you had been called away."

"It's a wonder I wasn't," replied the doctor. "All through the ceremony I thought I could hear a voice saying: 'Is doctor in there? He's wanted at once. Lew Trethven's broke his leg and wants doctor to come right up.' Now, then, are you ready? Eric and Andrew are going with me to escort you home. We were afraid you might lose your way."

The miners sent up a cheer as they dashed into the square.

"Do you dare ride with the doctor?" asked Stuart of Rhena.

"I dare go anywhere with you," she replied, and Stuart was excusable for kissing her as he lifted her into the cutter.

The doctor had hitched Ajax up with the fastest horse he could find in the hotel stables; and after they had started he had his hands full. The miners sent up a cheer as they dashed into the square and out into the road leading up to the Duncan house. And so, with the love of the men whose lives and happiness were to be henceforth so deeply mingled with theirs, in the company of the friends who had shared so largely of their experiences and were to be even more to them in coming days, this man and woman began the life that not even death can part, for they are one in Jesus Christ.

A week from that same evening [illegible] large mansion on a fashionable avenue in New York, Louise Duncan and [illegible] Vasplaine were married. A card announcing the event was sent to Stuart by Aunt Royal, at whose house the event took place. No notice of the marriage was sent to Rhena as Stuart's wife. It was the first intimation Stuart had had of the fact, the card reaching him two days after. He grieved over the event deeply and felt that the gulf between his sister and himself was impassable, but his life was crowded with great objects, and Rhena was all in all to him, and as time went on he found the sharpness of this pang lessened, though he never for a moment ceased his prayers and love for Louise.

The demands on both Stuart and Rhena were certainly no less now that the mines were opened again. The cottages were completed, but Stuart contemplated a general tearing down of all the old cabins on the range. In this he was met by an unexpected and irritating obstinacy on the part of the miners, who did not want to be disturbed.

"They're the most ungrateful lot on earth," said the doctor, to whom Stuart was talking about it. "If I was you, I'd hire some one to touch off every last cabin some windy night and burn up every last one of 'em—I mean the cabins. They, I mean the men, haven't got brains enough among them all to start a home for feeble minded old women!"

Stuart was wrestling with this problem and at the same time adding to his plans for the Hall of Humanity. Many and many a long conference was held in Eric's cottage, at Andrew's and in his own house over the project. Rhena had also proposed another plan, at first stoutly opposed by Eric and even Andrew, but afterward heartily seconded by them. It was, in brief, the shaping of the Duncan mansion into a modern hospital, to be in charge of Dr. Saxon. The house was too large for a living house. Stuart and Rhena wanted to be nearer the town, and Stuart had made his plans to build at once a house that would represent their ideas of what a home should be and enable them to be of more use in very many ways. They were too far away from the people. Rhena still continued her army work to a large extent, and the people all knew that her marriage had not lessened her love for them or her desire and willingness to save them. It was simply a question of using to the very best advantage the wealth which was in their power to use. In many respects the old mansion was admirably adapted for a hospital, and the doctor was certainly entitled now to a position where he could spend the remainder of his life in usefulness and peace.

Stuart and Rhena were talking this all over one evening in early spring. The foundation for the Hall of Humanity was going up very fast, and they were also running over their plans for the great number of things they hoped the building would represent. The lights had been turned on, and it was getting on in the evening. A soft rain was falling outside, and the big pines were sobbing the approach of a heavy storm. Stuart was sitting at the big table in the dining room with plans scattered about, and Rhena was walking up and down, her face alive with enthusiasm over some great idea, when the bell rang.

Something about the sound of it caused Stuart to rise and go to the door himself. As he flung it open the wind blew a fine mist of rain into the hall along with the fragrant odor of the dripping pines. But he was conscious of only one thing.

There on the stone steps lay a woman's form, and he knew as he stooped and lifted her that his sister had remembered what he said such a cruelly brief time before. He carried her into the chamber where his father had died and laid her on the same bed. As he did so and as Rhena gently threw back the wet fold of a cloak which lay across the face Louise moved and then opened her eyes and looked up at Stuart and Rhena. They will never forget that look. It told them as plainly as words that Louise had come home to die.

Ah, the Nemesis of the world is very bitter when it does come—and it always comes—in God's time.

CHAPTER XII.

STEWARDSHIP.

For a moment Louise looked at Stuart and Rhena as if she knew them. Then she sat up, partly supporting herself by one hand and with the other seeming to grope after something. There was a look of madness in her eyes.

"Father! He's hurt! Don't you know, Stuart? The horses ran away. We were thrown out! Why doesn't some one send for the doctor?"

YEAR IN THE WORKHOUSE.

Fred Briggs Sentenced by Judge McGee in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, June 18.—Fred A. Briggs will spend at least a year in the city workhouse unless the state supreme court comes to his rescue. Judge McGee sentenced the now famous nickel-in-the-slot man to serve six months in the workhouse for each of the two affairs for which he was convicted and also ordered that he pay a fine of $200 in each case—a grand total of a year in the workhouse and $400 in money. The court thus gave Briggs the maximum so far as imprisonment was concerned, but not the maximum in the matter of financial assessment. Briggs' attorney will appeal the case.

EDISON'S LATEST AND GREATEST.

Edison, "the Wizard," claims to have capped the climax of his inventor's career by discovering a cheap method of making an excellent quality of Portland cement. If this invention developes as he expects, houses thereafter will be poured, not built. Contractors will have standing patterns of houses in stock of, say, two or three dozen varieties. The form will be of wood and into it they will pour the cement, which will become as hard as stone. The wooden mould will then be removed and the house will then be ready for finishing touches. A house that now costs $10,000 can easily be built in this manner by unskilled workmen at the expense of a few hundred dollars. Edisons says that "small palaces of exquisite design will rent for $10 a month." The house will be fireproof and insurance will be unnecessary.

Great changes in the material conditions of people have been wrought by the discoveries of science, not by the legislation brought about by social and political reformers. Practical inventions are better than Henry George's "single tax" theories, Bryan 16 to 1 currency, or any of the nostrums of socialists. If Edison can put good houses over our heads at an insignificant cost he will have done much to aid man's "triumph over his accidents," and will be entitled to the eternal gratitude of the human race.

INDIANS ASK FOR INJUNCTION.

Progress toward the opening of the vast tract of land in Indian territory is suspended pending decision of the supreme court of the District of Columbia on the application for injunction restraining the secretary of the interior from parcelling the land to homesteaders. The land was formerly owned by the Kiowa, Commanche and Apache tribes of Indians. According to a special act of congress this land is to be thrown open to settlement not later than Aug. 6. Lone Wolf and two or three other Indians called on the president the other day and urged him to stay the proceedings, alleging that they signed the treaty conveying the land to the government on misrepresentation and a misunderstanding to the facts. The president declined to interfere, and the application for injunction was filed. Thousands of persons are interested in the outcome of the case, which will decide whether or not the lands are to be thrown open. The territory affected is larger than that opened in Oklahoma some years ago and the interior department has been making elaborate plans for parcelling out the homesteads. There is not much doubt as to the result of the case. The lands will be opened and if any injustice has been done to the Indians they may or may not be recompensed. The red man stands but little show in these days. But the probability is that some scheming white man has stirred up the present trouble and prompted Lone Wolf and his friends to apply for the injunction.

County Attorney Medicraft of Roseau county, desiring to know where his people were at on the railroad question, last week went to St. Paul and called upon Third Vice Presendent Hill. Mr. Hill was non-committal, as was expected, but he stated that a county like Roseau, which had made such rapid progress in the last few years, could not remain much longer without a railroad. When asked if the Great Northern contemplated builing in from Thief River Falls or some point south, Mr. Hill said the G. N. had its eye on that country, and might decide to do so, but that no one would know what was going to be done until the work commenced—that all talk of the road being built from any point was mere talk. Pres. Hill did not give out his decisions as to new roads to any one; when the Great Northern was ready it would move.

The whole world will read the press reports concerning Lady McKinley's recovery from her late illness with much gratification. She will be removed to her home in Canton, Ohio on July 1st.—Hallock News.

Now, wouldn't that jar you? "Lady McKinley!" The Hallock editor is a good Republican and an admirer of President McKinly and holds a fat appointive office under Gov. Van Sant, but that is hardly any reason for nick-naming the leading lady of the land with a title suggestive of an attempt to counterfeit royalty. Plain Mrs. McKinley is a good enough title and the only one the sweet mistress of the White House would recognize.

Fergus Falls is having trouble with its electric light plant, which is run by water power. Wheelock's Weekly advocates the installation of an auxiliary steam or gasoline plant at a cost of $3,000. Fergus was in the dark three months last fall.

One of the laws passed by the legislature last winter imposes a license of not less than $75 nor more than $100 upon transient merchants in a city or incorporated village, and not less than $50 nor more than $75 in a town. The license shall be paid to the city, village or town treasurer. Merchants who pay taxes in a place and help to enhance the value of the surrounding property will receive a just benefit from this law. It will do away with the grocery and dry goods peddlers.

Jas. Fellows, formerly of St. Paul, an old friend of H. J. Kaufer, is in the city today in the interests of the Cudahy Packing Co., which firm he represents. Mr. Fellows had umpired a game of base ball at Frazee between the Fats and Leans the day before his arrival here, and is thankful that he lives to tell the tale. The game is the principal event of every summer season at Frazee and it is worth a man's life to stand as umpire.

A story of an infant being found in a basket on the door step of one of our citizens Sunday morning proves to have been rather overdrawn. The facts are that a new-born babe had been brought in for baptism and had been taken in to its grand parents on the way. The infant is not maturely developed and cannot live.

Conrad Lajambe, of Lambert, last Friday read in the want column of The Gazette that Joseph Therein's residence property was for sale for $1,300. He threw the paper down, hitched up, came to town and bought the property, which had been for sale no less than a year, but which needed the quickening effects of advertising to move it.

Strawberry picking parties are all the rage. Despite the late frost 'tis said the luscious fruit was never more abundant, and there are great stories of records made by some of our leading ladies who indulge in berry-picking. If the boys can weave boogy fish stories, the girls have learned to apply the method to the berry tales.

Herman Adams went to Jamestown, N. D., on Monday, to purchase a $2,000 steam laundry plant, which has been shipped and which is expected to arrive this week. Theo. LaBissoniere returned Saturday from attendance as a delegate at the state convention of the Catholic Order of Foresters. Ed. Gerceau was elected as alternate delegate to the international convention to be held at Detroit in August. Minnesota has 10,000 Foresters, being the third ranking jurisdiction in point of members. The Foresters is growing rapidly, and with its reserve fund system bids fair to maintain its excellent standing.

Maud Sybill Champlin was a member of the class which graduated from the Grand Forks High School last Friday. Miss Champlin is a niece of Mrs. Theo. Gerceau of this city. The Herald says: "An Old Garret," the subject of the address by Miss Champlin, differed very materially from any of the others. It appealed to the early associations of everyone present and called to the minds of all the days of childhood when the old garret had attractions for all that no other place had and quoted from the writings of great authors to show that in the minds of great people as well as of others the tender recollections of youthful pleasures, simple though they were, held a tender spot in their hearts all through life. The address was a very good one and the subject was treated in a very entertaining manner as the audience did not fail to manifest when she had ceased speaking."

Thos. Cronan, of Rose Creek, was selling wines here Saturday.

Dan Linnihan went to Crookston yesterday to meet his brother J. L.

A. M. Hanson, Wylie representative of Swanson the Landman, sold the Brink farm in Polk Centre yesterday.

Mr and Mrs. Emil Zeh, of Thief River Falls, called on friends here between trains Tuesday. They were enroute for the twin cities.

J. L. Linnihan, a brother of our Dan, came up from New Richland yesterday with a party of farmers to look over Swanson's list.

John J. Nelson and Ida Anderson, two of Rocksbury's young people were married by Judge Knight last Thursday. The Judge has a dignified, fatherly air that seems to make him the favorite functionary in the Red Lake county matrimonial field.

The Red Men held their annual election last night which resulted in the selection of the following set of officers: Sachem, S. A. Swanson; senior sagamore, L. P Berthoo; Junior sagamore, Evangelist Quesnelle; prophet, Frank Jeffers; chief of records, J. E. Bray; trustee, Aug. Morin.

Arthur Wales and mother gave a musical entertainment at Maccabee hall Thursday night. The instrumental selections were all very good. Mr. Wales is a past master on almost every known musical instrument. Mrs. Wales, although a very old lady, retains considerable sparkle and fire in her piano playing. If Mr. Wales would eliminate the vocal numbers from his program and shorten his encores, he would add to its acceptability.

Miss Lisle Van Valkenburg, assistant principal in our schools last year, was today married in Rome to a Ypsilanti, Mich., school superintendent, whom she met there.

The Terrebonne Woodmen will celebrate St. John's day, which occurs next Monday. Supper and dinner will be served by the good ladies of Terrebonne, and there will be dancing in the Woodmen hall. A good time is assured all who attend.

M. O. Sortedahl will ask the city council to sell to him 4 feet alongside of his lot on corner Main and First Sts., recently purchased from H. B. Kaufer. The decision of the council will determine whether he builds a brick structure or a frame one. The prospective improvement following the erection of a fine two story brick structure should induce the council to make the concession. It lies in their power to give the building boom an incentive, and the public generally is very anxious to have the brick building put up, thus adding materially to the appearance of our main business street.

CAUSED A SENSATION

FAILURE OF HANS GRONNERUD, A LEADING BANKER OF RENVILLE COUNTY.

Supreme Court Decides Against Ex-State Treasurer Bobleter and His Bondsmen—Record-Breaking Feat of Ore Handling at Duluth—Federation of Labor Refuses to Allow Representation to Saloon Men—General State News.

St. Paul, June 11.—A Dispatch special from Olivia, Minn., says:

Hans Gronnerud, who has for 40 years been one of the most respected citizens of Renville county, and supposed to be worth a quarter of a million dollars, has failed, with reported liabilities amounting to $125,000 and no assets.

For many years he has been the owner of the Bank of Beaver Falls and a heavy stockholder in the Morton bank and State bank of Olivia, and the Renville County Abstract company, and has been engaged in loaning trust funds for Wisconsin and Eastern parties, as well as hundreds of people of this county, who have intrusted him with their earnings.

To the astonishment of every one who knows him, it has now leaked out that he is in a hopeless state of insolvency, with liabilities ranging from $100,000 to $200,000. The bank of Beaver Falls has closed its doors, and depositors are now clamoring for their money, but there appears to be no assets. Gronnerud has disappeared.

BONDSMEN ARE LIABLE.

Important Decision Rendered by the Minnesota Supreme Court.

St. Paul, June 17.—The supreme court, in a decision written by Justice Collins, sustains Judge W. L. Kelly of the Ramsey county district court in holding Former State Treasurer Joseph Bobleter and his bondsmen liable for any money the state may ultimately lose through the failure of banks in which Mr. Bobleter as state treasurer had deposited the funds entrusted to his official care. W. R. Merriam, Frank A. Seymour, Edward N. Saunders, Robert A. Smith, William Dawson and A. B. Stickney, as assignee of William Dawson, are held liable in the sum of $400,000, the amount of the bond furnished. State funds to the amount of $60,000 were deposited in banks which became insolvent and there has been deeded over to the state since property belonging to some of the banks which will reduce the total to about $50,000.

WORLD'S RECORD.

Missabe Handles 63,969 Tons of Ore in One Day.

Duluth, June 13.—The record of the world in handling material over a dock has just been made by the Duluth, Missabe and Northern (United States Steel) here, which received and shipped in 24 hours 63,969 gross tons of iron ore. The ore was received by train and shipped into 14 ships. The average cargoes for the day were of 4,571 gross tons, a remarkably high average and far greater than the average at any other port anywhere. There were seven cargoes of over 6,000 gross tons. Nearly all was Carnegie Steel company and Biwabik ores.

The road will probably ship in excess of 5,000,000 gross tons during the season, though it commenced in June 500,000 tons behind.

NO SALOONISTS WANTED.

Minnesota Federation of Labor Takes Strong Action.

Mankato, Minn., June 12.—At the session of the state federation of labor a resolution, introduced by Delegate Mullane of Minneapolis, requesting that at all future conventions of the federation the representatives of the Minneapolis Retail Liquor Dealers' association be admitted as fraternal delegates, was voted down by a big vote. A resolution calling for a more drastic compulsory education law was adopted; also a resolution asking the board of state fair managers to refrain from opening the state fair on Labor day was adopted.

CYCLONE AT ADRIAN, MINN.

Property Damage Is Extensive but No Lives Are Lost.

Adrian, Minn., June 12.—A cyclone struck this town at 1:30 a. m. from the southwest. Serious damage to property resulted, but no lives were lost. C. A. Sands' hardware building was wrecked and stock damaged about $500; G. H. Legros' furniture, Mrs. J. Peterson's restaurant, John Refenberger's meat market, P. C. Tinnes' grocery, Ferdinand Esser's meat market and L. P. Roering's jewelry store had the fronts demolished and stocks slightly injured. Residences all over town suffered. Barns were destroyed and some live stock killed.

DULUTH MEN INTERESTED.

Deal in Agricultural Lands Involving Several Million Dollars.

Duluth, June 14.—In a few days will be announced the organization of a company to accomplish one of the biggest deals in agricultural lands ever made in the United States. Several well known Duluth men are prominently identified with the enterprise. Lands valued at an aggregate of $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 will be opened by the new syndicate. A number of very wealthy outside capitalists have joined with several Duluth men to purchase a vast area of Western lands.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE FAILS.

West Superior Attorney Dies of Blood Poisoning.

Minneapolis, June 18.—Attorney Charles L. Catlin of West Superior, Wis., a former member of the Wisconsin legislature, died at the home of Mrs. L. W. Chapman, a Christian Scientist, 209 E. Sixteenth street. Mrs. Chapman says that Mr. Catlin's death was caused by a clot of blood in the heart, but Dr. W. B. Murphy, deputy coroner, in the death certificate, says death was due to gangrene.

Mr. Catlin was a Christian Scientist having been a believer in the doctrines of that sect for many years. Two weeks ago he was taken sick and came to Minneapolis for treatment. He was taken in charge by Mrs. Chapman. A nurse was engaged to look after him, but no physician was called in during his illness and the only treatment he received, aside from that given him by the nurse, was the prayers offered up at his bedside by Mrs. Chapman. After a few days gangrene developed in the patient's right leg, and after suffering for several days he died.

YALE HONORS IRELAND.

St. Paul Archbishop Given the Degree of LL. D.

New York, June 13.—A Herald special from New Haven, Conn., says:

The report that Yale has offered the degree of doctor of laws to Archbishop Ireland seems correct, despite the refusal of the authorities of the university to affirm or deny it. President Hadley said:

"It would be an unseemly proceeding of the university to discuss such matters. I decline to make any statement."

On what seems good authority in Catholic church circles, it is learned that the degree was offered and will be accepted.

This is said to be the first time the honor has been conferred on a Catholic clergyman in the history of the institution.

HILL'S FISHING TRIP.

Grover Cleveland and Other Notables to Accompany Him.

St. Paul, June 13.—President James J. Hill of the Great Northern will spend a few weeks fishing for salmon off the coast of Labrador. He will go East in a few days, possibly this week, where his magnificent yacht is held in readiness for him.

A distinguished party will accompany him on the trip as his guests. Among others will be ex-President Grover Cleveland, Colonel Daniel S. Lamont, first vice president of the Northern Pacific; George F. Baker, president of the First National bank, New York city; C. W. Bunn, general counsel for the Northern Pacific, and M. D. Grover, general solicitor for the Great Northern.

YEAR IN THE WORKHOUSE.

Fred Briggs Sentenced by Judge McGee in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, June 18.—Fred A. Briggs will spend at least a year in the city workhouse unless the state supreme court comes to his rescue. Judge McGee sentenced the now famous nickel-in-the-slot man to serve six months in the workhouse for each of the two affairs for which he was convicted and also ordered that he pay a fine of $200 in each case—a grand total of a year in the workhouse and $400 in money. The court thus gave Briggs the maximum so far as imprisonment was concerned, but not the maximum in the matter of financial assessment. Briggs' attorney will appeal the case.

WITNESSED BY THOUSANDS.

Parade of the Modern Woodmen of America at St. Paul.

St. Paul, June 15.—The feature of the day at the Modern Woodmen convention was the parade. Ten thousand men were in line and the route was lined by 200,000 people.

In the afternoon thousands attended the sports at the fair grounds. The programme was a varied one, being made up of automobile and motor cycle races, team drills, a balloon ascension, fancy bicycle and trick riding and other features.

NERO COPPER MINE.

Richest in Northwest Said to Have Been Discovered.

Pine City, Minn., June 12.—Developments in the last few days at the J. Bennett Smith copper mine at Chengwatana has opened up what will prove to be the richest and best paying mine in the Northwest. At a depth of 21 feet, the vein is literally loaded with fine copper. Much of the rock excavated contains a large percentage of native silver and every foot in depth adds to the richness and interest.

D. W. Lawler Resigns.

St. Paul, June 17.—Daniel W. Lawler has resigned as general attorney for the Great Western road, which position he has held for nearly eight years, to resume the general practice of law in this city. In taking this step, however, Mr. Lawler does not entirely sever his official connection with the Great Western, for he has accepted appointment as its local attorney for St. Paul, which is also an important and lucrative position.

Kennedy Jury Disagrees.

New York, June 18.—The jury which listened to the evidence against Dr. Samuel J. Kennedy, accused of the murder of "Dolly" Reynolds, reported to Judge Newburger during the morning that they could not agree on a verdict. The judge at once discharged the jury. It is said the final ballot stood four for conviction and eight for acquittal. This is Dr. Kennedy's third trial for this crime.

A Night of Terror.

"Awful anxiety was felt for the widow of the brave General Burnham, of Machias, Me., when the doctors said she could not live till morning" writes Mrs. S. H. Lincoln, who attended her that fearful night. "All thought she must soon die from Pneumonia, but she begged for Dr. King's New Discovery, saying it had more than once saved her life, and had cured her of Consumption. After three small doses she slept easily all night, and its further use completely cured her." This marvelous medicine is guaranteed to cure all Throat, Chest and Lung Diseases. Only 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's drug store.

A Good Cough Medicine.

It speaks well for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy when druggists use it in their own families in preference to any other. "I have sold Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for the past five years with complete satisfaction to myself and customers," says Druggist J. Goldsmith, Van Etten, N. Y. "I have always used it in my own family both for ordinary coughs and colds and for the cough following la grippe, and find it very efficacious." For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

One of our prominent bachelors, representing his respective "side" in the "City of Saints," when even others from our part had braved the way to said point had drained the public fountains to his heart's contents at the time. His thoughts flowed in words emphasized by many adjectives, as his mind roamed across the boundary, on the sweet plains of his heart's destiny and the joyous talk was spiced by phrases of imaginations of the coming connubial bliss, demonstrating that bachelor's sails, in spite of any tempest, may be set for the tranquil ports of matrimony.

The Ebenezer Y. P. Society met last Friday night, and an unusual large crowd attended. Only part of the program was rendered, as it was thought well to rehearse and practice for the festival to be held June 23. Read our announcement in this issue. Be sure to turn out. This is the best time of the year. You do not want to live through the beautiful midsummer time without going to anything like this in nature's decorated temple. We always have good festivals and large attendance. If you have never been with us before, come and spend Sunday afternoon. We shall be glad to behold the happy faces of all people, all nationalities around us. Program both in English and Swedish.

The death of Mrs. C. J. West, at Duluth, recently, was foretold by two fortune tellers. Five weeks previous she visited a palmist in Chicago, who gave her less than three months to live. Later, at a party given in her honor, one of the guests foretold her demise. Mrs. West took to her bed and died at the appointed time. Inflammation settling in the nerve centers was the cause of death, supposed to have been influenced by the fortune telling upon the victim's mind.

I mentioned to him that I had been similarly troubled and that Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy had cured me. Wealthy Baltimore Collector Has Secured a Celebrated Raphael Canvas.

It is said that the well-known painting by Raphael, "La Vierge aux Candelabres," has been purchased by Henry Walters, of Baltimore, and is now in his art gallery. Various estimates have been furnished as to what he paid for it, running all the way from $50,000 to $200,000.

Some weeks ago it was reported that this celebrated painting had been bought by a well-known American art collector, but the name of the purchaser could not be established then. Raphael's "La Vierge aux Candelabres" was exhibited at the Metropolitan museum in New York many years ago. At one time it was in the collection of Mr. Monroe, the Paris banker. He refused an offer of $200,000 for it. Since his death, however, it had been offered at a much lower figure. At the Parker sale it was put up at a reserve price of 600,000 francs, but there were no bids at that figure, and so it was withdrawn.

While the central figure in the "Vierge aux Candelabres" has been conceded by the best authorities to be by Raphael, some doubt has been expressed about the infant child, while the figures on the right and left in shadow and the background are believed to have been painted in at a much later period than the date of the original picture.

THEIR LIVES IN JEOPARDY.

Sailors on the Great Lakes Are Constantly Beset with Danger and Hardship.

"If any man thinks the American sailor is a thing of the past he should spend awhile on the great lakes," said C. F. Bailey, of Duluth, Minn., reports the Washington Post. "The American fresh-water sailor is every bit as picturesque a personage as was the 'salt' of early days who carried our merchant flag into every port of the world. His life is just as full of hardships and just as full of dangers. There is a large fleet of three and four masted schooners on the lakes and stories of the wrecking of them come with every big storm. A nastier body of water than Lake Erie when it comes on to blow can be found nowhere, and some of the experiences of the life-saving crews along its shores are the most thrilling in the history of the service.

"The men who man the big lake steamers, of course, have not much of romance in their lives, but there are enough of the old sailing vessels left to keep a considerable array of men employed. Any skipper who can navigate a schooner from Duluth to Buffalo is a good enough sailor to sail around the world, and he will do as well as the next man to take care of his vessel in the roughest sea the Atlantic was ever able to blow up."

BURGLARIES.

JOS. PARADIS AND M. SKALA WERE THE VICTIMS.

Last night burglars entered Jos. Paradis' saloon through a window, and carried off his cash register containing fifteen dollars; they entered M. Skala's general store by the rear door and helped themselves to $20 that was in the till, to two suits of clothes and several pairs of shoes. At both places they left evidences of the work in the way of tools—chissels, files, etc. The burglars left an old coat at Skala's, and this, together with the other clues, ought to furnish a good basis to work on if any effort is to be made to apprehend them

Mrs. Treffle Grandbois died at her home in Gervais township Tuesday morning at one o'clock, after an illness of six weeks with tuberculosis. The funeral was held this morning from St. Joseph's church, the remains being interred in the North Side cemetery. Mrs. Grandbois was 62 years old and leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss. Mrs. Grandbois came to this section from Rice Lake, Wis., in 1884, and the family settled on a homestead in Gervais township, where they have since resided, except at short intervals, when they moved to town to give the younger children a chance to attend school. A fine new dwelling was constructed last fall, but it was not given deceased to long enjoy the fruits of her labors. Mrs. Grandbois will be much missed in St. Joseph's church and sodality circles, where she has played a prominent part for many years.

Judgment Affirmed.

The judgment of the district court in the cases of Mrs. George Cunningham and Mrs. A. C. Adams has been upheld by the supreme court. The case was tried at the October term of the district court at Red Lake Falls.

Mrs. Cunningham and Mrs. Adams were injured in crossing a span of the Great Northern railway's tracks at Thief River Falls. A spur had been laid to the mill and a ditch ran beside the track. The crossing, it was claimed, was not properly made, and as the ladies with their husbands drove over the rear seat gave way and both ladies were thrown backwards from the rig and severely injured.

Suit was brought by Mrs. Adams and Mrs. Cunningham against the city and the railroad company, and the jury awarded a verdict of $5,000 for the former and $4,000 for the latter, which awards were cut down by Judge Watts to $3,500 and $2,500 respectively. The defendants appealed and the decision handed down sustains the district court and awards damages as mentioned above.

Thief River Falls at the time of the trail secured a stipulation from the railroad company relieving them of their share of the liabity and the railroad company suffer alone in the verdict.

Suit was also brought by Messrs. Adams and Cunningham for the loss sustained by them in being deprived of the services of their wives. These cases will probably be tried at the October term of court.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure Catarrh by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of Catarrh, has at last perfected a treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures Catarrh, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "Snuffles the guaranteed Catarrh Cure" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

Rhena slipped out of the room and telephoned for Dr. Saxon. Stuart fell on his knees by the bed, and the next half hour was one of the most agonizing he ever knew. Louise raved and wept. She kept going over the old times, repeating word for word exactly many conversations between herself and Stuart at the time he had begun to decide on a new life. Everything dated from Ross Duncan's death. There were also mingled with all that was so painful in Stuart's memory a great many expressions and exclamations which made him shudder and put his hands over his ears, words which revealed experiences of the life Louise had known since leaving Champion. Stuart did not dare yet to imagine all that these words meant.

When Dr. Saxon finally reached the house and entered the room, Louise was lying down, moaning. The doctor went right up to her and spoke her name. She opened her eyes and looked him full in the face. She shrieked out hysterically: "Doctor, doctor, save me! I'm going mad! I am mad!"

"[illegible] a poor child!" And that was all [illegible] Louise began to cry terribly. [illegible] her Aunt Royal's name in a [illegible] shade even the doctor quiver a little. And after that, as suddenly as if she had been struck dumb, she fell back like one dead and lay so still that Stuart thought at first the end had come already.

He and Rhena stood pale and stricken. It had all come upon them so suddenly. The doctor did all in his power. There was not much he could do. At the end of half an hour Louise came out of the condition of exhaustion into which she had fallen and cried again, this time calling out the name of Vasplaine with such terror that Stuart could not endure the sound and went into the other room across the hall. Rhena followed him.

"This is awful!" said Stuart, with a groan. "What do you suppose this all means? What has that villain done?"

"It means that he has left her and that"— Rhena had guessed so much. It had come like a sudden blow to them. She stepped up to Stuart and confronted him.

"Please God, we'll save her life!" he cried.

"And her reason," added Rhena gravely. "Pray God we may!"

They went back together into that chamber and, with the doctor, watched through the night, fearing, at the doctor's suggestion, lest she should suddenly rise and go out into the storm which before morning beat on the mansion in great fury, while the big pines sobbed like a requiem over dead hopes and buried loves.

With the gray light of morning a change came. The doctor noticed it first. He had not closed his eyes once. Now he rose and went into the library, signing to Stuart to follow him.

"She is out of immediate danger," he said as Stuart stood there by him, nervous with the strain. "She has had some terrible mental shock. It is doubtful if she can recover. But she has the Duncan constitution. All things are possible. I think she will be quiet through the day. If she isn't, send for me at once."

He wrung Stuart's hand and went down into the town through the storm, and an hour later Stuart saw him dashing up the hill and past the house over the Henry road to attend some desperate case out on the hills. How the doctor lived without sleep was always a wonder to all Champion.

As for Louise, she lay in a condition of stupor through the day and the following night. When occasionally she roused at Stuart's calling her name, she seemed to know him, but did not express surprise at being back in her old home. Gradually the truth grew upon Stuart and Rhena that nearly the entire period of Louise's life since her marriage was a blank to her. She would lie for hours silent and without expression in her great eyes, which were still beautiful, although her once lovely face had grown old and haggard. When she spoke, it was with the fretful, complaining voice she had used when Stuart had angered her. To his great surprise and relief, she did not appear to dislike Rhena. She accepted her gentle, loving nursing as a matter of course, neither showing gratitude nor expressing resentment. She grew feebler and more exacting in her demands, so that Rhena had her powers taxed to the utmost in providing for her many wants. She asked constantly for the most expensive and difficult articles of food to be prepared, demanded costly flowers for the decoration of the room and was continually begging Stuart to buy her jewels to wear. He went down town and took out of the office safe, where they had been lying ever since his mother's death, a necklace of pearls and another of diamonds, together with a ruby bracelet and several turquoise rings. Ross Duncan had bought these for his wife when he had been able to say that he was worth a million dollars, and the entire value of them would have kept a dozen families in comfort all their lives. Mrs. Duncan had not cared much for these playthings and had seldom worn them. Ross Duncan had willed them to Stuart instead of Louise because of a whim he took one day. He said they were family jewels and ought to remain with the son of the house.

Louise seized on these baubles of light with an eagerness and a love of display that were terrible to Stuart. She wore first the diamonds and then the pearls around her small white neck and finally put them both on, wearing them together with the bracelet and the rings. She cried continually for new dresses, and at last Rhena, at Stuart's suggestion, brought out some of Stuart's mother's silk gowns which had been packed away in a chest in the attic, and with a little changing they were made to fit Louise, who, although she was able to sit up only a few hours, took the most pitiably childish delight in putting on all this finery, with Rhena's help, and then, with a hand mirror constantly within reach, commenting on her appearance with the greatest eagerness.

One day Rhena slipped away from her while she was busy in this manner, and as she was going into the library Stuart came in from the drawing room. He had been down superintending the new building.

"Oh, Stuart, Stuart," Rhena almost sobbed as she closed the door so that Louise could not hear, "it is so horrible! It seems so like—so like clothing Death itself in tinsel and glitter. Oh, the mockery of it makes my heart ache! If we only knew more of the real cause of Louise's trouble, we might know how to bring her back to reason! Only"—

"Only what, dear?" Stuart asked, taking her in his arms to comfort her as he remembered how faithful she had been to her great trust in caring for his sister.

"Only—the end is not far off, I fear. She is wasting away like the snow on the hills in spring."

Stuart groaned. "I have seen it, dear. The doctor has done all he can. He gives no hope." He was silent. Then he spoke with calm strength. "I am going down to New York, and I am going to see Aunt Royal and probe the thing to the end. I have written her, but had no reply. And all our efforts to find Vasplaine have failed. The family knows nothing of him. I must go down anyway to see after some necessary materials for the building. I will be back inside of a week."

So that was the way Stuart came to be in New York just before Aunt Royal had planned to pack her trunks and go abroad for the summer.

He was ushered into the great drawing room of the mansion on the avenue and remained standing by one of the windows waiting for Aunt Royal to come down. His heart was heavy as he thought of Louise. He tried to compose himself for the interview, remembering his Christian faith and all that it required of him in all circumstances.

Her entrance was hardly noticed by him when she finally appeared. Velvet carpets are made to deaden the footsteps of market gardeners' daughters who have made their money by investing in tenement and saloon property.

"This is an unexpected pleasure, Stuart, I am sure," said Aunt Royal in her usual polite, gentle voice.

"You know what I am here for, aunt?" Stuart asked, coming to the point at once.

"No; I don't know that I do. I suppose some business in connection with your philanthropic schemes in Champion. I hear the strike is all over. I suppose the miners have learned sense by their folly."

"Aunt," said Stuart firmly, ignoring all she said, "I have come down here to learn the truth about Louise. Tell me all you know about it. It may help to restore her reason before she dies. For God's sake, aunt, if you know what I ought to know, let me have it."

Aunt Royal's face paled just a trifle. "Restore her reason?"

"Yes," replied Stuart, with some sternness of tone, "her reason. She is out of her mind. Her memory of events since her marriage is a blank. She must have received some great shock. Of course we know Vasplaine has deserted her. And she is dying. After all, if"— Stuart paused, and his heart almost stood still as he caught the expression on Aunt Royal's face. He was not looking at her, but at her reflection in the large cheval glass. And it was the reflection of an absolutely selfish and heartless enjoyment of social standing, unruffled by the coarse sins and miseries and aches of a dying humanity.

Aunt Royal's voice came to his ears with its usual placid smoothness.

"Louise left me on her wedding tour immediately after her marriage. They went south and then took a trip out west. When they returned, they took rooms in the Avenue hotel. I saw them often, but not intimately. Vasplaine had begun to drink. There was trouble, of course. But when he finally left her I was as much surprised as any one."

She paused suddenly, and Stuart was silent. The great gilt clock on the marble mantel dropped a silver ball into a bowl, and Aunt Royal turned her head slightly toward it. Stuart still looked at her reflection in the mirror.

"When did Louise leave New York for Champion?" he finally asked.

"I don't know anything about it," replied Aunt Royal, with the first mark of irritation she had shown.

"Do you mean to say, aunt, that after Vasplaine's desertion of her, Louise never came near you?" asked Stuart, turning full upon her and looking into her face almost as resolutely as if he really knew the facts.

Again Aunt Royal's face paled. She could not control her blood, even after so many years of artificial repose in the exercise of society manners.

"I tell you I did not see her after Vasplaine's disgraceful desertion of her. He turned out to be a gambler and a dissipated fool of the worst sort and flung Louise's property and money away like a madman. I don't know where he is now."

"I have not asked about him," said Stuart dryly; "I am anxious for Louise."

He remained a moment more in silent thought. He could not help believing that this woman had not told the truth, but he was powerless to prove his belief. At last he found his heart so sick at the thought that he longed to escape from the house.

"You will stay to lunch?" Aunt Royal asked politely as he rose and moved to go.

"No, I thank you," replied Stuart quietly. "I must start back to Champion this afternoon."

"I hope poor Louise will recover," she said, and was about to add something more, when one of the servants came into the hall and announced an important message at the telephone from some one connected with Aunt Royal's proposed summer tour.

"Excuse me while I answer this. I will let you see yourself out!" she exclaimed with her conventional politeness, and was gone.

Stuart was just going out when the servant, who had opened the door for him when he came in, spoke to him.

"I can tell you something about your sister, sir, if you will wait a minute."

"Of course I want to know all I can." Stuart was surprised, and reflected that this man might be simply a talebearer, or trying to earn a fee, but the thought that Louise might possibly be the gainer by knowledge he might learn of her quieted Stuart to listen.

"I haven't time to tell it all out," whispered the man hurriedly. "But Mrs. Vasplaine, she came here one night about a week ago, and I couldn't help hearing what went on in the drawing room. She begged her aunt to take her in and shelter her till she could find a place. Her husband had run off with another man's wife and gambled away all the money, as near as I could make out, and the poor lady was almost crazy over the shame and ruin of it. She begged and begged, but her aunt wouldn't listen to taking her back, with all the scandal. You understand, sir, how people in society look at those things, and so at last Mrs. Vasplaine went away. She looked as if she would drown herself, sir. I felt so sure of it I slipped out back way and followed her, and saw her take a depot bus, and then I lost her. I don't mind telling you, sir; this is truth. I leave her this week, anyway. I'd as soon live with the devil's wife as with her, and no mistake, begging pardon if she is your relative."

"This is an unexpected pleasure, Stuart."

Stuart clinched his hands tightly, and in his heart he uttered a groan.

There stood Aunt Royal, her face flaming. She had come into the hall through a side door right behind the servant. How much of the man's story she had heard Stuart could not tell, but it was enough to let her know that Stuart at last knew.

"It's a lie, a miserable lie!" she screamed. It was the only time Stuart ever saw her in a passion. He had his back to the door, and for a moment he looked her in the face, and then, without a word, he turned around, opened it and walked out. The warm sunshine seemed like something almost human as he closed that door behind him and walked away. He knew the truth now. At last there was no doubt in his mind that Louise had been denied a shelter in her greatest need by this society woman, who would risk hell itself rather than the possible loss of society standing and her own selfish ease and pleasure. And that he was right in believing the servant's story was shown by after events as well as by items of news which came to him from various sources through New York acquaintances.

Putting all he could gather into a connected series, he managed, before returning to Champion, to learn in general what must have been Louise's experience after Vasplaine had ruined her [illegible] and then brutally abandoned her. She had found herself practically without friends in New York. The only relative there was Aunt Royal. She naturally turned to her in the hour of her trouble. She was probably at that time well nigh crazed with the succession of blows that had fallen upon her. It seemed to Stuart incredible at first that Vasplaine in so short a time could get possession of Louise's money and squander it. But the more he learned of his career the less he wondered. Louise had trusted him, fascinated by a certain attractiveness such men often possess. And when he finally left her she found herself alone in a great city, ruined.

Her aunt's refusal to receive her added the final stroke to the weight of her shame and misery. Stuart never knew what Louise had done after leaving her aunt's house before she appeared so unexpectedly in Champion. There were at least two days when he supposed she must have wandered about or taken the wrong train to get home, all that time fast losing her reason and yet with enough left to shape her way back to the old home. The shock of her experiences told the story of her condition as Stuart found her when he lifted her up from the doorstep that rainy night.

All this gave Stuart bitter thoughts as he hurried back to Champion. He almost dreaded to get off the train for fear the doctor would meet him, as he did before when his father had died, but no one was there with any news, and when he reached the house he was surprised to find Louise sitting up and looking no worse than when he went away. He tried to take courage for her. The doctor said she might linger on through the summer, but gave no hope of mental recovery. With this constant shadow of death in their home, therefore, Stuart and Rhena, with thoughtful and serious hearts, their love for each other refined and strengthened by this affliction, went forward with their great plans for the brotherhood of Champion.

The Hall of Humanity was going up rapidly now. Stuart had determined to have it ready for dedication before winter set in if possible. He had employed a very large force of the best workmen he could find. All this, of course, meant that he and Andrew, Eric and Rhena and the doctor, together with other good people in the town, had given a vast amount of thought to the plans and purposes of the building. At the same time Stuart was beginning the foundations of his own home down in the town. The Hall of Humanity stood on one side of the square nearly opposite St. John's church. Stuart had owned several small buildings there and had torn them down to make room for the new building. His own house was to be near by.

A few days after Stuart's return Eric and Andrew had come up at Stuart's request and with him and Rhena were sitting in the library at the Duncan mansion discussing the plans that were now beginning to take visible shape. Eric had gone back into the mines with the other men and seemed to be passing through an experience of bitterness. He had not yet recovered from his humiliation at the loss of his influence over the men. He was able to be present at the conference on this occasion, owing to a half holiday which the miners were celebrating in one of the numerous lodges.

"I don't understand this arrangement here," said Andrew, who was examining the plans of the hall, which lay spread out on the table.

Stuart explained the particular point, and then they all began to talk about the building.

"What is your exact idea about the use of the big hall?" asked Eric as he pointed at the diagram marking the place of an immense auditorium.

"I don't know that I have very many 'exact' ideas about any of the uses of the building except that I want it to represent in general the great word helpfulness. I have thought of great singers and players and lecturers who could be induced to come up here at moderate prices, understanding our object, and then pack the hall full of men and women and children at a small sum within their reach to pay. I believe we could attract up here some of the best talent in music and speech in all the world and give the miners of Champion a taste of some of the world's best beauty. Then I would have a week or two of fine picture exhibitions or fine art exhibits and so on, with, say, four times a year a great flower exhibit. I am a convert to your idea, Eric, of music and flowers for everybody. We could let Andrew here have charge of the flower show if he would promise not to ruin us with hothouse extravagances."

Andrew was so excited over the thought that he got up and began to pace the room.

"My!" he exclaimed. "Just think of a hall the size of that lined all the way around with chrysanthemums or callas or orchids! You'll allow me a few orchids, won't you, Stuart?"

"But, look here!" cried Rhena. "Don't let Andrew spend all our money on orchids the first thing, the extravagant fellow! Think of all the dollars it will take to run these other departments, Stuart. I have questioned some the practicability of all these rooms leading out from the main hall."

"Why, you did the planning for them yourself, little woman. What's the matter with them?"

"The question I raise is how much all these different things will really help the people. Now, here, for instance, is the space we have left for the Salvation Army hall. I admit it looks beautiful on paper, and it will no doubt look fine when it is done in wood and stone, but will the army feel at home in it? Will they be able in there to reach the very people who now come into the old hall?"

"Why, you critical soul, what do you want us to do—make a specimen army hall like the old shanty we have already and knock out a dozen panes of glass and stuff miners' hats and the defunct remnants of old clothes into the holes to make the place appear homelike and attractive?"

"There's a good deal of sense in what your wife says, just the same," said Andrew. "If the Salvation Army gets to be too refined, it won't be the Salvation Army any more, and it won't do the army work."

The decision of the court is that the amount required to redeem property from a tax sale is only the amount paid at the sale, plus interest, and not all delinquent taxes and costs, as construed by the auditor.

The state supreme court, in the case of the state vs. P. G. Hanson, held that the laws forbid the sale of cottolene, which is manufactured so as to resemble lard, unless the package is labelled "Lard Substitute," and the evidence justified the conviction of Mr. Hanson for selling unlabelled cottolene. Justices Brown and Lewis dissented.

Albert H. Hall, formerly assistant county attorney of Hennepin county, has been appointed by Judge Pond as receiver for the American Mining and Investment company of Minneapolis. The court, in its order naming the receiver, speaks in plain terms about the methods of the concern whose sensational existence is terminated by these quo warranto proceedings.

While the Duluth bound limited on the Northern Pacific railway was passing through Harris at the rate of 60 miles an hour, a Bohemian, named Tom Jehecka, broke the glass in a vestibule door and jumped, landing on a side track among a lot of box cars. The train was stopped and he was picked up apparently without serious injury. Lack of work caused despondency, hence the act.

Peter Sildstad and Lars Skogstad, aged 22 and 16 years, respectively, were suffocated by gas six miles south of Granite Falls, while engaged in digging a well. Sildstad had gone down into the well to commence the day's work, while Skogstad remained above, but not hearing anything from his companion below he slid down the bucket rope. They were both taken out by other workmen shortly after, dead from the result of natural gas that had accumulated during the night.

Court Reverses Itself.

St. Paul, June 18.—The state supreme court has reversed its former decision in the water frontage tax case. The new decision sustains the decision of the Ramsey county courts, which was that the tax would hold good. The tax is 10 cents per front foot.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

PHIL. A. KAUTER.

Published weekly, Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls.

The general land office has decided, in a contest case against one Francis McCarty involving a valuable quarter section of land near Glyndon, Minn., that occasional visits to the land every six months is not sufficient to hold the claim.

Humboldt Lugger, son of Minnesota's deceased entomologist, is following in his father's footsteps, and has been looking over the grasshopper situation in the valley counties in Minnesota. He found a few of the bugs, but only in a few spots had any damage been done.

Just how the Minnesota Pan-American commission happened to forget Red Lake county in their Bread-and Butter State pamphlet advertising Minnesota, is a mystery, unless they thought RedLake county was so much a Bread-and-Butter county that we did not need advertising.

The Crookston Journal says they discount the best of 'em when it comes to a Fourth of July celebration, as for instance, their $1,200 fund which will be blowed in on that day: and that all the places that want to do business are welcome to cut a Butterick pattern oft their latest.

At Halstad last week a blind pig was raided and the proprietor C. Skibstad, placed under the ban of the law. Forty-eight empty beer bottles were offered in evidence but Skibstad swore that he drank the entire contents during the day. He was found guilty and fined $25 or thirty days in jail.

The Burlington railroad, that great artery of commerce in the Middle West, which has played an important part in the politics of Missouri, Illinois, Iowa and Nebraska, is, since coming under the control of Jas. J. Hill, to go out of politics. This dicision on the part of the Burlington is the same that is being reached by other wise controlers of large business interests, and by many individuals.

A marriage somewhat out of the common was celebrated at Little Falls a few days ago, by which Isham Collins and Mrs. Collins were reunited after a separation of forty years. They lived in West Virginia before the civil war and were divided on the issue. Their difference of opinion led to an estrangement and a divorce was granted. Both came to Minnesota and through the influence of their son they have been brought together. Mr. Collins is now 78 years old and his wife is 75.

An exchange tells of a lady who decided to scare her husband, who was quite a hard drinker, so he would reform. To do this she procured the costume of a devil she saw at a masquerade. The next time the erring spouse came home feeling happy she quickly donned the costume, and as he opened the door she stepped forward and said in sepulchral tones, "Come with me; I am the devil." The result was rather startling, as the response to her greeting was, "Zat so? Shake hands, old boy, I'm your brother-in-law: I married your sister."

She Didn't Wear a Mask.

But her beauty was completely hidden by sores, blotches and pimples till she used Bucklen's Arnica Salve. Then they vanished as will all Eruptions, Fever Sores, Boils, Ulcers, Carbuncles and Felons from its use. Infallible for Cuts, Corns, Burns, Scalds and Piles. Cure guaranteed. 25c at W.A.Schreiter.

Facts and Fancies.

THE STRAWBERRY SHORT CAKE.

He enjoys with vim and vigor
Both the berries and the cake:
Not a boastful word he utters
Of "those mother used to make."

For she did not use to make them
Let the truth be written down:
In his youth she picked the berries,
And he sold them all in town.

The Fergus Falls hospital census shows males, 789: females, 553—total, 1342.

The weather clerk has made a severe blunder. Was it not Hicks who predicted dry weather in June?

And Fergus, too, is to have a Fourth as is a Fourth—subscriptions liberal, prizes ditto, and fun in store.

Jas. J. Hill: "The future destiny of this country is to feed the world, and I believe it our duty to get ready to accept the responsibilities in the way of transportation needed to meet the requirements of the world."

The scarina on Tuesday last presented the czar with a daughter—the fourth. It is said that the czar, in his disappointment over the sex of his children, threatens to abdicate. That's all right for a czar, but the ordinary father with half a dozen daughters in succession can't abdicate. He's got to keep right on shoveling all the harder to fill the hungry months.

Cheerful information is passed out to the effect that potatoes will be cheaper by July 15. The retail price is now in the neighborhood of 70 cents per bushel. Old potatoes are valuable in every state in the west, including those far south. New potatoes from the south are coming slowly. The Minnesota crop will begin to appear on the market in good quantities by July 15, and the situation will be easier. The Minnesota crop will be large.

LITERARY NOTES.

The August number of the Woman's Home Companion will be largely devoted to short fiction. The chief story, "In the Merry Month of May," is by Brander Matthews. The scene is Central Park in Maytime. Mr. Irving R. Wiles is the illustrator.

The Delineator is a magazine that has not been satisfied with attaining remarkable financial success—it aims to keep abreast of the times in both the quality of its contents and the mechanical excellence is at once apparent to the most casual observer. Particularly does the 3-color work, illustrating the Pan-American Exposition appeal to one's admiration. The Delineator issued 625,000 copies of its July number.

Seldom has a better chance for "staying-at-home traveling" been offered than in The Ladies' Home Journal for July. From WestPoint, as pictured by George Gibbs on the cover, readers may go with W. L. Taylor to see "A Busy Boston Street at High Noon"; next try "Goin' Fishin' with Joe Jefferson"; in Florida; then travel out West with Ernest Seton-Thompson to see "The Mother Teal and the Overland Route"; next go along the Atlantic Coast to find out how the places "Where our Country Began" looks to-day: then seek Northern Michigan to hear "The Story of a Maple Tree" by William Davenport Hubert; next visit an Eastern magazine editor's office and enjoy the good-humored raillery of "The Case Against the Editor", by Edward Bok; and finally see what "The Country of Sheridan's Ride" looks like now-a-days. There are many other articles of equal interest on various subjects. By the Curtis Publishing Company, Philadelphia. One dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

The Great Northern weed burner was at work on this route last Friday. The burner is a projection directly behind the engine, emitting and burning oil as it moves along the track, the heat thus generated destroying all vegetable matter within range.

J. H. Yates, the Range man and his retinue left yesterday after a six weeks' stay in our midst. His original plan was for a three months' stay, but the opposition put up by our hardware men supported by the press had its effect in a reduced number of sales.

Farmers in southern Polk and Norman counties are somewhat worried over the grasshopper pests, which have already made sorry inroads on several fields. The use of hopperdozers has been resorted to. The state furnishes the oil, but the farmers must provide the dozers, which can be secured for 90c apiece.

Sheriff Sampson has taken charge of the new county jail, which is now ready to accommodate prisoners. Ida Bell and Mrs George Gervais, who are detained in the Polk county jail awaiting the action of the Red Lake County Grand Jury in October, will be brought over.

Cut this out and paste it upon the window casing in your kitchen, now that the gasoline stove season is well on, and tell the servant girl to read it every morning right after family worship. If you have a gasoline fire, throw flour on it or meal or sand. Never water. Flour, meal or sand will put the fire right out. Water only spreads it.

The Great Northern annual excavating-bee is having its session in the Big Cut this week. Some forty men are at work clearing the tracks of mud that slides down the clay embankments as a result of the recent heavy rains. The train has not been getting any further than the mill, but may be able to pull into the depot to-day.

The question as to whether fruits can be raised in Northern Minnesota has been decided, says the St. Hilaire Spectator. Ole Cliffgeard, two miles from that town has an apple orchard—400 trees, eight or nine different kinds. A New York expert has just examined the fruit and says it is as healthy and well developed as any he has ever seen in his native state at the same time of year.

John Leveck is about the streets again, and although his eyes are very weak after the recent operation, he can see after years of almost total blindness, and expects to enjoy fairly good eyesight after his eyes are strong enough so that he can use specially-selected glasses which have been provided by Dr. Morely, who performed the operation.

A meeting of the building committee of St. Joseph's congregation was held Sunday. It was decided that the new school building would be located on the northeast corner of the church lot, facing south. The building is to be of brick 42x63, two stories, and will have four school rooms, with a combined seating capacity of 240. Before proceeding the plans will be submitted to the bishop and also to the Sisters, who are to assume charge.

Stock-Raising Pays.

A few weeks ago Carl Weise, of Vivian, shipped 45 hogs to Chicago and sold them for $726.40. One of them weighed even 700 pounds. He has eighty more to sell the fifteenth of July, and will have a number of little ones to winter over. A short time ago he turned over a carload of cattle that averaged 1485 pounds a head. Mr. Weise has found by experience that it does not pay to keep scrub stock and favors the Poland-China hogs. With the same amount of feed these hogs average, when ready to sell, 150 pounds more than a "scrub hog." He has also learned that raising live stock at the prevailing high prices is a great deal more profitable than raising wheat. Last year he put in ten acres of wheat and ninty of corn, this year he has one hundred acres of corn and no wheat.

Tuesday's Storm.

The thunder shower Tuesday was a fitting climax to the series of rain storms that have been coming almost every day since the third of June, when the drouth was broken. Monday the thermometer registered 92 in the shade, and the night was so hot as to almost preclude the possibility of sleeping, and about 10 o'clock on Tuesday the storm burst in all its fury. Rain fell in sheets, and in a few moments after it started every gutter was overflowing, small bridges over small streams were inundated so that travelers could scarcely proceed on their journeys. Lightning struck the horse of an immigrant, as he was driving into the city from the south. The animal was killed outright, while the driver and the other horse escaped. Simultaneously, Mrs. Joseph Gamache was struck in the temple, while at the dinner table, sitting near an open window. She was uninjured. The Gamache residence is but a few yards from where the horse was killed. The Healy residence also got a shock, lightning following a dead wire of a private telephone line into the kitchen. Miss Johnson, the servant who was ironing in the kitchen, was knocked senseless, but soon recovered, and experienced no after-effects. Reports from the country indicate that the fields were flooded in bad shape, but the high winds yesterday, following the storm, helped evaporation, and the prospects are now for drier weather.

To the Teachers of Red Lake Co.

You are hereby notified that the third annual summer school will convene in the High School building in the city of Red Lake Falls, Monday, July 8th, at 8 o'clock a. m., and will continue four weeks. Prof. P. J. Kuntz will again have charge of the school and he will be ably assisted by Prof. A. M. Locker, of Wabasha, a specialist in several branches, especially music. This school has been secured upon the promise of a large attendance; it is for your benefit and it is earnestly desired that you make it a success by attending the whole term. Several new features will be introduced into the work this year, among them being the model school taught by one of the teachers. Instruction in music and elocution will be another important factor in the success of the school. Due consideration will be given certificates of attendance both in the fall examinations, which will be held immediately after the close of the session, and in my recommendation of teachers for the schools of the county.

You are advised that the law permits you to close your school in order to attend the training school and in the few instances where there is but one or two weeks left of the term, I would suggest that you arrange to have it put into the next years term in order that you may be present the first week. All persons over 15 years of age are eligible to attend, provided they expect to teach. Again I urge you to attend and insist that none will be excused without a good and valid reason.

Yours truly,
Frank Jeffers,
Co. Supt.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed color, also his eyes and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

H. W. PEARSON'S SUIT AGAINST THE GREAT NORTHERN RAILROAD.

Robbery and Murder Near Merriam Junction—Immense Meteorite Falls Near Crookston—Great Western Buys the Duluth, Red Wing and Southern—Receiver for the American Mining and Investment Company—State News in General.

St. Paul, June 19.—A damage suit involving $1,500,000 is on trial before Judge Kelly and a jury, in the district court. Herbert W. Pearson sues the Great Northern railway for money alleged to be due him for his services in locating several coal mines in Montana and Washington, a job that lasted six and a half months.

Pearson asserts that the total value of the coal in the mines he located amounts to a trifle more than $14,000,000. He asked to be paid in proportion to what he believes his services as an expert were worth. The Great Northern maintains that $200 a month is sufficient pay for the time, and refuses to give him more.

ROBBERY AND MURDER.

Tramps Yielded Small Return, and Robber Shot.

Shakopee, Minn., June 20.—Two colored men from St. Louis entered a car at Merriam Junction Tuesday night to sleep. Later three white men came in, and about 2 a. m. three masked men entered, one carrying a 38-caliber revolver and one an iron bar. The one with the gun said, "Line up," and they were marched out of the car and searched, giving up about $2.50. The man with the gun then turned to William Riggs, colored, and said he had more money, which was tied to his shirt. Riggs said he would get it. Then Riggs scuffled with him and the young fellow shot Riggs, the bullet entering the abdomen and striking the spinal cord, after passing through the right kidney, killing him instantly. The robbers escaped.

A LARGE METEORITE.

One Weighing Over Two Hundred Pounds Fell at Crookston.

Crookston, Minn., June 20.—J. M. Stephens, who lives near Crookston, exhibits a photograph of a meteorite which recently fell upon his farm. The noise it made in its descent was like that of a huge rocket. Looking in the direction from which the noise came, Mr. Stephens saw a huge ball of fire falling rapidly. It seemed like a huge cylinder revolving very rapidly and sparks were flying from it. It was seen only for a moment before it struck the earth only a few hundred yards from his house. A cloud of smoke and dust, and even flames, shot up as if the dry earth had become ignited. The specimen weighs 210 pounds, and its appearance indicates that it is of the metallic type.

GREAT WESTERN GETS IT.

Sale of the Duluth, Red Wing and Southern Announced.

St. Paul, June 25.—The sale of the Duluth, Red Wing and Southern railway to the Chicago Great Western system took place in this city Friday. The officers of the former held an all-day session with President Stickney, Secretary Wight and General Counsel Kellogg of the Great Western. All papers in connection with the deal were examined and signed and the securities turned over to the Chicago system. No details bearing upon the transaction were made known, neither was the purchase price announced.

USES STRONG LANGUAGE.

Comments of a Minneapolis Judge in Naming a Receiver.

Minneapolis, June 19.—Judge Pond of the Hennepin county court has filed his order appointing Albert H. Hall receiver for the insolvent American Mining and Investment company, and, in a memoranda which accompanies this order, the judge literally flays alive with stinging words and apt characterization the officers and promoters of the company. It has been many years since a judge in a Minnesota court has permitted himself to use such strong language in the condemnation of anyone appearing in proceedings before the court.

COMING TO DULUTH.

Entire Office Force of the Oliver Mining Company Leaves Pittsburg.

Pittsburg, June 20.—The office force of the Oliver Mining company will be moved bodily from Pittsburg to Duluth this week. The party will occupy three special cars on the Pittsburg and Lake Erie railway, leaving here at 7 o'clock. At Milwaukee will be taken on the office force, which has been stationed there. This movement will take to Duluth the entire office force of the mining and transportation departments of the United States Steel corporation.

Court Reverses Itself.

St. Paul, June 18.—The state supreme court has reversed its former decision in the water frontage tax case. The new decision sustains the decision of the Ramsey county courts, which was that the tax would hold good. The tax is 10 cents per front foot.

Circus Clown Drops Dead.

Staples, Minn., June 22.—During the evening performance of Berwick's circus the brother of the proprietor, who was acting as a clown, dropped dead while on his way to the dressingroom. Heart failure was the cause.

MINNESOTA DAY.

Residents of Gopher State Dedicate Their Building at Buffalo.

Buffalo, N. Y., June 19.—The Minnesota state building at the Pan-American grounds was dedicated during the day. Governor Van Sant, with his staff, the Second battalion of the First Minnesota regiment, many members of the Minnesota Editorial association with their families and many citizens of that state were present. A light rain was falling but this did not prevent the crowding of the Temple of Music where the dedicatory exercises were held.

Previous to the dedication the governor and his staff, the Minnesota commissioners and the Minnesota Editorial association met at the Minnesota building and marched under escort of the Minnesota guardsmen and a band to the Temple of Music. The programme included prayer by Rev. A. B. Meldrum of St. Paul; addresses by Mayor Diehl of Buffalo and Director General Buchanan of the Pan-American exposition; the presentation and acceptance of the building by Alex MacDougall, president of the board of Minnesota managers, and Governor Van Sant of Minnesota, respectively; and further addresses by H. P. Hall of St. Paul, representing the Minnesota press; Herbert P. Bissell and Rowland R. Mahaney of Buffalo; United States Senator Moses E. Clapp, Representatives F. C. Stevens and James A. Tawney of Minnesota and Dr. George H Bridgeman, president of Hamline university of St Paul, and others.

The editors will remain here until Friday morning when they will go to Niagara Falls. Saturday will be spent in Toronto as the guests of the city and the Canadian Press association.

EDITORS GO CALLING.

Minnesota Pencil Pushers Visit Mexico and South America.

Buffalo, N. Y., June 22.—Mexico and the South American states were visited by the Minnesota editors during the afternoon and the call was most enjoyable for both the guests and their hosts. Governor Van Sant and staff, in dress uniforms, paid a formal visit to the buildings of other countries and were received with great cordiality and ostentation. Minnesota is the first state to do this little courtesy and it was warmly appreciated by the Pan-American legions.

Senor Naunzlew, in charge of the Mexican exhibit, in speaking to Superintendent James McMullen, said he would like very much to meet the governor of Minnesota. This gave McMullen the idea and he arranged for the tour.

TRIED TO SAVE HIS BROTHER.

Accident Near Sacred Heart, Minn., Results in Two Deaths.

Sacred Heart, Minn., June 24.—Two discolored corpses awaiting burial at Mrs. L. Brevig's farm west of this place are all that remain of Martin Lynstad, a hero in humble life, and his brother Peter. They were digging a well and Peter was at the bottom when gas was struck. Feeling himself being overcome, he called for help and Martin went to his rescue. He also was seriously affected before they could be hauled up to pure air. All efforts at reviving the men proved unavailing, and both died without regaining consciousness.

WITHOUT BLOODSHED.

County Records Removed From Sauk Rapids to Foley.

Sauk Rapids, Minn., June 19.—About 500 men, with about 100 teams, arrived here early this morning and began loading the records and furnishings of the offices in the courthouse.

The advent of the Foleyites caused considerable excitement and a lawyer, formerly located in Sauk Rapids but now a resident of Foley and one of the prime movers in the county seat removal agitation, was egged, but no blood was shed. The various county officials went to Foley this afternoon. Everything is now quiet.

GREAT CROP ASSURED.

Present Outlook in the Northwest Very Bright.

St. Paul, June 22.—Reports from something like 600 grain-producing and grain-receiving points in Minnesota and the Dakotas agree in the common verdict, to wit, the condition of small grain in the Northwest was never better than now; the stalk is strengthened and the soil saturated to withstand any drouth that July may produce, and unless some unknown enemy arises in the next 30 days we shall harvest a heavy if not record-breaking crop.

SHIPPED 66,850 TONS.

Ore Docks at Two Harbors Break Record for Coal Handling.

Duluth, June 19.—The Duluth and Iron Range ore dock system at Two Harbors comes forward with a record for ore shipments for a day which sets the Duluth, Mesaba and Northern system in this city back to second place. Tuesday in a day of 24 hours the Iron Range docks shipped a total of 66,850 gross tons, eclipsing the hitherto unbroken record of the Mesabe docks by 2,881 tons.

Another Body Found.

St. Paul, June 22.—The body of a small girl was found in the river at the St. Paul Boom company's works by an employe. While the body is in an advanced stage of decomposition that does not permit of an identification it is almost certain that the remains are those of Mary Rosenfield, aged 7 years, one of the four children who figured in the crime of William Rosenfield, which stirred St. Paul seven weeks ago.

Andrew Ortloff has lost a fine colt.

C. A. Lindquist is able to be around again.

The board of equalization met last Monday at Wylie.

John Malmquist has given his barn a new coat of paint.

Chas. Johnson is hauling lumber for a large chicken-house.

Mrs. R. C. Monroe is visiting with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. P. Ford.

John and Gust Naplin made a business trip to Crookston last Tuesday.

O. P. Johnson, of Bray, has been doing carpenter work on a granary for August Moren.

Thomas Hanson, of Stephen, the section boss, had his family moved here to be with him at his new location.

Mr. and Mrs. Eric Peterson, of Crookston, visited with relatives and friends in Bray, and attended our festival last Sunday.

F. C. Leppert, O. T. Romsos, Alfred Romsos, Oliver Romsos, S. J. Swanson turned out to attend the festival last Sunday.

Nels Johnson and Axel Sandberg braved the muddy roads from Crookston to attend the Young People's Society festival last Sunday.

C. A. Lindquist was taken suddenly and severely ill last week Wednesday so that a doctor had to be immediately called. He is now improving.

Wylie is ever growing, ever expanding. The pounding of hammers is heard from morning till night. Nick Eckstein's dwelling is now under construction. Mr. Eckstein has a very nice location for the new building, which seems intended to be a very large edifice. It will greatly improve the looks of the town. Andrew Dreelan is putting up a large barn on the north side, he is also excavating a cellar, so we are under the beliet that a large and commodious dwelling will soon rise there. Andrew had good luck in striking water on the place and a windmill is towering over his yard. The cheese factory is also under construction, and is expected to be ready in a short time. It looks city like to come to town, when we see busy people wherever we look. Surely, our burg is taking long steps forward.

Sam Leppert is seriously ill. The doctor was called Monday.

W. H. Scribner went to Marshall Co. last week to look up land.

It may seem late for seeding now but barley is still being put in the ground.

The agent for the grader tried here, sold the town the machine Tuesday.

Andrew Letvig and S. J. Swanson transacted business at the county seat Monday.

Harry Johnson is still in St. Hilaire. His mother is taking care of him, and he is slowly improving. Mr. Johnson is making frequent visits to him.

Grain is growing nicely in the present wet weather. Roads dried up nicely after the rains of the first part of last week, but were soaked again in the late rain.

James Sutor has his new barn about completed. It is the largest structure of its kind in the vicinity, 32x100 feet. It's a great improvement to the looks of our country.

Wm. Randall, of Red Lake Falls, representing Alliance Hail and Cyclone Mutual Insurance Co., Austin, Minn., was out this way looking for a local representative for the company here. This company has been doing business for thirteen years. It has now a large guarantee fund to protect its members, and is endorsed by Farm Stock and Home and by leading banks of the state. Your correspondent accepted the agency for this district, and will be glad to accomodate anyone wishing to insure his crop. H. P. Johnson, Wylie, Minn.

John Peterson and family went to St. Hilaire Monday.

Hail storms may visit any part of our country and destroy the standing crop. You should insure your crop in Alliance Hail and Cyclone Mutual Insusance Co., Austin, Minn. The by-laws will show you the good features of this company. It is surely the best of its kind, endorsed by Farm, Stock and Home, and many leading banks. H. P. Johnson, Wylie agent.

The midsummer festival held last Sunday afternoon was a fair success considering the uncertainty of the weather, and the muddy roads. The program was artistically rendered and highly enjoyed by the audience, and the society's treasury was satisfactorily added to. Thanks to all who honored us with their presence. Some must be very much afraid of bad roads and wet weather. But we are grateful for the crowd we had.

CHANCES FOR WOMEN

One of the Sex Seeking Employment Learns Strange Things.

Facts Which Prove That the Men Have Not a Monopoly on Ingenuity—Odd Ways of Making a Livelihood.

The ways in which New York women who are dependent upon their own efforts make both ends meet are varied. A woman who has been forced to look for work made memorandums of what she found others doing. She did not try for ordinary clerical work, or stenography, typewriting or employment in stores, says the Sun.

"I found one woman," she said, "who is making a comfortable living for herself and supporting an invalid husband by selling gloves which have been thrown aside at the glove counters for apparently trivial reasons. For example, in fitting a glove the saleswoman may break off a button or rip a seam or soil it so as to spoil a sale. This woman has a contract with several stores to take all such gloves at a reduced figure.

"She skillfully repairs whatever damage has been done and sells the gloves at less, of course, than the store price. I do not know what she pays for the damaged goods. That depends, I fancy, upon the extent of the damage. But I do know that in some cases she sells a pair of $1.50 gloves for one dollar, maybe less, and so on. I know she has built up quite a business in this way. A number of her patrons now have orders with her frequently in advance for from one to a half dozen pairs. The saving of 50 or 75 cents on a pair of gloves is quite an item.

"Another woman who had tried in vain to make a living at millinery, in which she is an expert, calls at a number of houses in her neighborhood and takes the daily market orders. She is paid for this, of course, and I am pretty sure she is smart enough to get a commission besides from the butcher and the grocer.

"Sometimes when the mistress of the house wants something extra for a special luncheon or dinner the order-taker makes more. On one occasion a woman who had lived in Washington wanted some Lynnhaven oysters. Now it is a fact that you can't find a Lynnhaven oyster in New York such as you can get in Washington.

"This order-taker knew exactly how to get the Washington Lynnhavens at a reduced price, and how to have them shipped, and she made a handsome profit on her order. She told me she would not exchange her work for a place in the biggest millinery foundry, as she called it, in New York.

"Another woman buys all the theater tickets for a colony away uptown. Her patrons call up on the 'phone and name the date and play, and she does the rest.

"I found another who, in addition to some other little jobs, furnishes several churches with communion bread. Then there is another who sends out samples of new goods to customers in the country. She is not exactly a purchasing agent, for there are many such; she simply sends out the samples, naming the house where the goods may be obtained. The name and the address of each person receiving the samples are furnished to the house sending out the samples, and in case of a sale the woman is notified by the house, which pays her a commission.

"This sort of business, she told me, pays better than a direct purchase by an agent—if the woman who sends the samples has a good list of customers, for the reason that many customers in the country rather like the idea of dealing with the house direct in purchases. The stores, she added, are not so apt to send samples as a woman who makes a business of it.

"I found a woman in a drug store in a fashionable part of the city who is a graduate in pharmacy. She fills only such prescriptions as are brought in by women. She receives a salary, but she gets a commission on all the trade she secures from women.

"And so it goes in this great city where so many women have to make their own living. If a woman can only find something novel she will find plenty of people to help her out."

America a Country of Bridges.

The market for bridges is far greater in the United States than elsewhere. The states have now 190,000 miles of railways, and it has been estimated that there is an average of one span of metallic bridge for every three miles of railway. This gives 63,000 bridges on existing lines, without including those required for new lines. The increase in the United States of the weight of cars and engines has resulted in wonderful economic changes. This increase of weight of rolling stock has led to the renewal of the 63,000 old bridges by stronger and heavier ones. This demand has brought into existence many bridge-building companies, and they can well afford to equip themselves with the best labor-saving and accurate working machinery, regardless of first cost, as they know it would seldom, if ever lie idle.—Engineering Magazine.

Troubles of Sun Spot Periods.

The sun's surface is known to be subject to greatly increased disturbances every 11 years, known as the sun spot period. Auroral displays and disturbances of the earth's magnetism have a similar period, and the pictures of the corona which have been obtained show markedly characteristic varieties of form dependent also upon the sun spot period. So one of the principal efforts of scientists of late years has been to obtain pictures of the corona with as much detail as possible.—Science.

GOT A JOB LOT OF RUBIES.

By Chance a Minneapolis Man Secured a Choice Collection of the Gems.

James O. Beaudry, a Minneapolis man, is being congratulated upon the remarkable fortune which has attended a chance purchase of his, says the Minneapolis Tribune.

Some five years ago, while in Halifax, N. S., he chanced upon a Russian who had in his possession several rough stones of a peculiar red color. Mr. Beaudry was impressed with the appearance of the stones, and finally procured one for a mere song and placed it with some other trinkets, all of which he soon lost sight of. About three weeks ago the circumstance was brought to his mind by seeing another stone which resembled the one he had bought. He looked up his possession, and, after examining it a little, took it to a local jeweler for examination.

A close scrutiny of the stone led to the belief that it was some kind of a ruby, and, at the suggestion of the jeweler, it was sent to New York for the opinion of an expert.

The stone proved to be a Siberian ruby, from the mines in the northwestern part of Siberia, and some idea of its value may be obtained from the fact that it is worth $75 per carat. The Minneapolis man has ten stones which were cut from the rough piece. Four of these weigh each 1¾ carats, two weigh one carat, two seven-eighths of a carat each and two of the smallest are each one-quarter carat in weight.

GUARANTEE WAS NOT GOOD.

This Customer Was Sharp and No Bunko Game Could Be Played on Him.

"I see," he remarked, as he entered a Farnam street drug store, "that you have a cough medicine for sale here which you guarantee to cure any case of throat trouble ever contracted."

"Yes, sir," said the clerk, relates the Omaha News, "and only 25 cents per bottle."

"Yes. What kind of a guarantee's back of the medicine?"

"Our own, for one; the manufacturer's, for another."

"Yes. What's the guarantee?"

"We will refund your money if the medicine does not do what it should. How much do you want?"

"Not so fast, young man—not quite so fast. S'posin' this here store goes broke before I use up the medicine—where do I get in? Now, if you'll let me take a bottle of it, and it cures me, I'll come back and pay for it—does that go?"

"It does not."

"Maybe you'd be willing to deposit the money in a bank, where it could be had if the stuff doesn't do its duty—eh?"

"We would not."

"Well, then, you can go to thunder. I've read of these here bunko games before, but I never bumped into one. Maybe you kin skin the city folks, young man, but your uncle has had his whiskers cut several times. Good day."

HOW TO KILL HUMANELY.

Illinois Humane Society Issues Instructions for Putting Animals to Death.

The subject of putting afflicted animals to death with as little pain as possible has been receiving the careful attention of the Illinois Humane society, and, as a result, it has decided upon what it considers the best methods to adopt, says a Chicago exchange.

In circulars just issued to the police instructions for killing horses, dogs and cats are given. It is pointed out that in shooting a horse the revolver should be held within a few inches of the head, the aim being toward the center of the head, midway between the eyes and ears, in other words, exactly in the middle of the forehead. When a hammer or ax is employed the horse should be blindfolded. Two vigorous, well-directed blows just below the foretop will make death certain.

In shooting a dog the pistol should be held near the head, the aim being a little to one side of the center of the top of the skull. The shot should be fired downward so that the bullet shall go through the brain, into or toward the neck.

After much consultation with veterinary surgeons and experts, the society decides that there is no more merciful way of killing cats than to put, with a long-handled spoon, about half a teaspoonful of pure cyanide of potassium on the cat's tongue.

Chicken-Picking Cyclones.

You no doubt have heard of cyclones blowing feathers off chickens, or possibly you have witnessed the operation, but whether you have or not, it is a fact that cyclones are sometimes chicken pickers, as well as the pickers of other things, says the New York Herald. Well, an ingenious German, wiht a devastating cyclone for a model, has invented a machine that creates cyclones to order, while you wait, for chicken picking purposes. His cyclones are inconsiderable in size, but very intense in their field of action, which is large enough to embrace a Shanghai rooster. You take the rooster or other fowl to him, he touches a button, and before you can wink twice every feather is off the bird. Several cross currents of air from electric fans, turning at the rate of 5,000 revolutions a minute, do the work.

Brutality in Old-Time War.

In the fourteenth century the slaughter of women and children after a town or castle had been taken by storm was one of the most common occurrences of war.

Drainage Convention.

Among the events in the Valley next month is the meeting of the Tri-State Drainage association at Fargo. This is composed of prominent residents of the Dakotas and Minnesota, and the meeting will be from July 16 to 18. The association was organized at White Rock, S. D., in '99 and the other two annual meetings have been held at Grand Forks and Crookston. The object is primarily to prevent the recurrence of the annual floods in the Red River Valley, and secondary, to render the river navigable.

The river derives most of its water from Lake Traverse, the Bois de Sioux, the Otter Tail and Red Lake rivers. Being farther south the ice breaks up much earlier than at other points along the Red river, which runs north, and floods are precipitated by ice jams about the international boundary line, which raises the water and backs it up stream over the fertile farms, doing millions of dollars worth of damages each decade.

It has been shown by resolutions adopted at the other two meetings and by the legislatures of the three states interested, that 1,000,000 people live in the Valley and tributary country, and that they have property valued approximately at $1,000,000,000. Twenty million acres of land in the Valley are assessed for taxation purposes, but it is annually threatened with disastrous floods, which not only entail large property losses, but endanger lives both by the floods and from the diseases resulting therefrom. With proper drainage and by the establishment of a system of dams and locks and reservoirs, all these disasters would be prevented. The plan would not cost less than $1,000,000, the amount of damage estimated from the '97 flood alone. Once protected the Valley would furnish happy homes and subsistance for 5,000,000 people.

Government engineers have made surveys and demonstrated the practability of the plan. It is convincingly shown that the reservoir system connecting Lakes Traverse and Big Stone with Otter Tail river will not only control the water from which the Red River draws its supply and thereby prevent floods, but it will also hold in storage the water, which can be turned on at will to make the Red river navigable, with the addition of the proposed dams and locks.

Congressional representatives from the three states will ask congress to make the million dollar appropriation and have the work done under government supervision.

A Good Cough Medicine.

It speaks well for Chamberlain's Cough Remedy when druggists use it in their own families in preference to any other. "I have sold Chamberlain's Cough Remedy for the past five years with complete satisfaction to myself and customers," says Druggist J. Goldsmith, Van Etten, N. Y. "I have always used it in my own family both for ordinary coughs and colds and for the cough following la grippe, and find it very efficacious." For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

"It is with a good deal of satisfaction and pleasure that I recommend Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy", says Druggist A. W. Sawtelle, of Hartford Conn. "A lady customer, seeing the remedy exposed for sale on my show case, said to me: "I really believe that medicine saved my life the past summer while at the shore, and she became so enthusiastic over its merits that I at once made up my mind to recommend it in the future. Recently a gentleman came into my store so overcome with colic pains that he sank at once to the floor. I gave him a dose of this remedy which helped him. I repeated the dose and in fifteen minutes he left my store smilingly informing me that he felt as well as ever." Sold by W. A. Schreiter druggist.

A Famous Newspaper Correspondent.

There are few if any newspaper men in the United States with a more brilliant record than that achieved by Mr. William E Curtis, the famous Washington correspondent of the The Record-Herald. Among newspaper men as well as among the careful readers of newspapers, it is generally conceded that Mr. Curtis is the dean of the large colony of trained journalists at the national capital. His relations with the eminent men in Washington are so intimate and so personal, that he has an immense advantage over the ordinary correspondent. They give to him their confidence, knowing that he will properly discriminate what should be said and what should not.

The newspaper career of Mr. Curtis began in Chicago in 1872. Starting as a reporter, he worked his way upward rapidly to the position of managing editor, which he resigned to become the Secretary of the South American Commission—a government appointment. While in this position, Mr. Curtis traveled extensively in Central and South America, producing several popular volumes as the literary result of his labors. Later on, in co-operation with Secretary of State, James G. Blaine, Mr. Curtis organized the work of the Bureau of American Republics, and was placed in charge of that organization; and at the World's Columbian Exposition, he distinguished himself by his labors as the executive head of the Latin-American departments. As correspondent of The Chicago Record, Mr. Curtis' travels carried him not only into all quarters of the United States, but almost everywhere abroad. His letters to The Record from Japan and China were published in book form; likewise his letters from England, Germany and France, and also those resulting from his travels in Mexico and in South America. A letter from Mr. Curtis is published in every issue of The Chicago Record-Herald daily and Sunday.

I mentioned to him that I had been similarly troubled and that Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy had cured me. He bought a bottle of it from the druggist here and informed me that one dose cured him, and he is again at work." For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

BLACK VILLAIN.

A HARD CASE, NOW LANGUISHES IN RED LAKE CO. JAIL.

A hard character is the negro arrested Sunday evening at Allard's confectionery store, after a two days' chase by Sheriff Sampson and Deputy Cyr. The black man gives his name as John Willard, and claims he comes from Halstad where he worked for a farmer named Henderson. Willard had been prowling about Terrebonne for a couple of weeks, sleeping under bridges and in hay lofts and living on the charity of the good women of the neighborhood, to whom a hungry man is an object of commiseration, even if he is a black man—and Willard is black—very black.

Last Thursday he pulled up at Michael Quesnell's and his conduct led to a reprimand by Mrs. Quesnell and her sixteen year old daughter, whereupon he flourished a gun, and a huge butcher knife, threatening the ladies saying that "This is the way I fix 'em"—and drew the knife blade along his throat. With this he lit out. The ladies came to town and swore out a warrant. Sheriff Sampson and Deputy Cyr scoured the surrounding territory until Saturday night but could not locate him. Sunday he showed up in the city, unaware that he was wanted. He had in money upon his person $82.82. Willard was taken before the Judge of Probate, who turned him over to Justice Toupin, and he has been committed to the county jail here to await the action of the grand jury in October. Since his incarceration he has admitted having served a sentence at Stillwater and developments tend to confirm the belief that the sheriff is harboring a tough customer who has been there before.

Vic's Letter.

Calamba P. I. May 24, 1901.

Editor Gazette:

I am still in the same position, acting Q. M. Seargent of this detachment.

1st Lieut. Boyer of the 39 U. S. V. formerly of this town and commissary officer was tried and found guilty of stealing articles of rations to the amount of several thousands dollars. The irrigularities were committed in this place. He got four years military imprisonment and a dismissal from the service of the U. S. He has done several little things that I know of myself—drew 50 pounds of ice through the commissary department for the Detachment of Engineers and then gave us half of it, holding the rest for himself, when he ought to have purchased his own. He also kept about four months' baking powder from all the troops in this town which he claimed we were not entitled to. He carried it on paper and sold it. We suffered for it as we bought it ourselves.

It has set in raining here and we have a shower every day. My old regiment is ordered to the United States, but I will not get back with Bill and Simon. If I do not go back with them I will undoubtly re-enlist in the same Co. I am now in.

I have sent you four pictures of the hanging here and will send others when I get them. This is all Good-bye

"Vic."

Hard on School Teachers.

Some one who has studied the peculiar faculties required of the school ma'am, pays her the following eulogy: She must be a primary, intermediate grammar grade, high school teacher combined: she must be able to build fires, adjust fallen stovepipes, put in window panes, sweep, dust, split kindling, drive a horse, keep out of neighborhood quarrels, know how when and where to whip a bad boy, understand the school laws, raise money for libraries keep all kinds of records, plant trees on Arbor day, be of good character, and pass an examination in all branches of modern education. For these accomplishments she receives $30 per month. Think of getting such a salary. Out of this she pays her board, buys eductional papers and books, attends county conventions and furnishes slate pencils to the pupils. What is left she adds to her bank account or starts a bank if she perfers.

Pretty Wedding.

Says the Thief River Falls News: One of the prettiest weddings ever celebrated in Thief River Falls took place yesterday forenoon, and John Herman Bishoff, of Red Lake Falls, became the husband of one of the fairest ladies of this city, Miss Theresa Victoline Bourque. The ceremony was performed in the Catholic church and was celebrated by high mass. The church was very prettily decorated with ferns and a large number of friends were present. The bride wore a beautiful dress of white silk organdy, while the groom was dressed in conventional black and wore white gloves. After the wedding a reception was held at the residence of the bride's parents and at noon they took the train for Buffalo, N.Y., where they will spend a month.

KEEP YOUR BLOOD CLEAN

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure Catarrh by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of Catarrh, has at last perfected a treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures Catarrh, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "Snuffles the guaranteed Catarrh Cure" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"Snuffles" is the only perfect Catarrh Cure ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve Hay Fever or Cold in the Head.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

Sent prepaid to any address in the United States or Canada on receipt of One Dollar. Address Dept. B. 578 EDWIN B. GILES & COMPANY, 2330 and 2332 Market Street, Philadelphia.

HIS BROTHER'S KEEPER;

BY CHARLES M. SHELDON,

COPYRIGHT, 1896, BY CONGREGATIONAL AND SUNDAY SCHOOL PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

"Christ wore good clothes, didn't he?" asked Eric bluntly.

Everybody was silent a minute. They all knew what he meant. And still, if the army stood for a distinct way of reaching humanity, who could tell what the result might be if that special way was to be disturbed?

"Don't worry about that," Stuart finally said, with much homely sense in his thought of the future. "If going into a decent, well lighted, warmed and seated room is going to destroy the army's usefulness, we'll turn it out into the old barracks again. Rhena and I have discussed that a good deal. It's the only thing we ever disagreed over, and we don't really disagree over that."

"These kindergarten rooms on this side of the building are going to be models!" cried Andrew with enthusiasm. He had suggested these rooms and had superintended the plans and specifications.

"That's the right idea!" cried Eric. "I'm like the doctor in thinking a good many of the older folks among us are fools or numskulls. But in the children lies the hope of the entire labor question if they have the right start."

They were all bending over the table now, discussing the numerous features of the hall with its almost bewildering multitude of appliances. There were to be a model reading room and library; several rooms for social gatherings and various amusements; bathrooms and gymnasium; a picture gallery; a room fitted up expressly for the use of a lantern and photography, and other rooms where classes could be gathered if the time ever came when it seemed wise to reach out with the helping hand farther than they saw the way clear yet.

"There's one thing we haven't reckoned upon much," said Eric almost moodily at last. "What use can all these people make of the various new things that you are going to give them, if, after all, they have to spend the bigger part of their lives, in the daytime at least, underground? And who is going to say that all these fine things thrust into the men's minds will not produce a discontent that will result in time in greater misery than the condition they are now in?"

"Why, you old pessimist, would you say to the human race, 'Don't smell that flower today, because you know you may not have any tomorrow and that will make you discontented?' Because a man's life is devoid of all pleasant things, shall we keep him in that condition, for fear he may grow discontented by knowing something better?"

"That's right!" exclaimed Rhena, her eyes flashing. "Eric knows better than to talk that way. Think what these men have missed all their lives! Surely it will be very little for some of them to enjoy, the best we can do. And as to the time they are underground, Stuart, put your brains to work to bring about a condition of labor so that the men can have more leisure and see more of God's earth when the sun shines on it."

"Hear, hear!" cried Andrew. "'Bring me,' says Aladdin to the slave of the lamp, '30 golden dishes full of pearls and as many more full of diamonds.'"

"What she asks is apparently impossible now," responded Stuart, "but why should it always be so? Why should so many thousands of human beings dig in the ground, in the dark, in constant and deadly peril, shut out from most of the pleasures of the earth, in order that other men like me may have a more comfortable time?"

"Because they don't know how to do anything else and would not if they could," said Eric bluntly.

"You don't know that, Eric. You only think so because they never have done anything else."

"Well, some one must do mining. Humanity needs iron for its civilization, and how is it going to get it if some of us don't go down into the earth and dig it out? Shall we take turns around? Suppose we try that? I'll go down this week, and next Andrew will take my place while I preach for him, and the next week Stuart can"—

"Yes, that would be a fine plan," said Rhena. "Next you would be wanting me to go into the mines and serve my week. And I would be willing," Rhena added in a deep sadness which sometimes fell upon her, "if I thought it would help to solve any problem and make life a greater and more blessed reality to thousands of souls than it is now. How little we seem to be doing to answer the question after all! We need more wisdom, and, dear friends, we have not gone to the eternal source of all strength and truth as we should. Before we talk over our plans any longer don't you think we ought to pray awhile?"

The request was so simply and naturally put that the rest at once, as they sat about the table, bowed their heads while Rhena prayed. Andrew followed, then Eric, and lastly Stuart. They were straightforward petitions for wisdom and a larger knowledge of God's will. The somewhat foggy atmosphere of the discussion seemed to clear up after that little pause while they talked with their Father, and the rest of the afternoon they seemed to feel that whatever mistakes they might make, and however short they might fall of answering any real problems, their hearts and wills were asking for divine wisdom, and their great purpose was to use all talents and all property for the uplift of humanity.

About 4 o'clock, as Eric and Andrew were getting up to go, the doctor came in to see Louise. He had come into the house without being noticed and had entered the library just as Stuart was saying: "It will be a splendid thing for the doctor. It will keep him busy, but he won't be exposed any longer to these terrible rides over the range in winter."

"If you are talking about the plan of turning this house into a hospital and shutting me up in it the rest of my life, you're wasting your time and breath," said the doctor gruffly. "I simply won't do anything of the kind. I can't live without fresh air."

The doctor looked grimly at the little group about the table. It was raining hard, and he had come in dripping. He was going to lay off his wet coat in the hall before going to see Louise, but as he stood there he looked as if he ought to be very comfortable. The water had run from the brim of his old hat down upon his right ear, and what semblance of a collar he had on when he started out had melted away down his neck under the folds of his great coat.

"But, doctor, why don't you have more sense, as you say to the rest of us?" remonstrated Stuart. "Here you are today wet through, and like as not you won't get a dry thread on you again until tomorrow or next week, for all that I know. You'll take your death cold this way."

"Did you ever know me to take my death cold?"

"And this place we are arranging for you," continued Stuart, "will be a comfortable berth for you the rest of your life. You're getting too old, doctor, to expose yourself through another winter."

"I'm not such an old fool as to be cooped up in a hospital yet. Who will look after the men outside if I stay here all the time?" the doctor asked stubbornly.

"Why, we can get a man all right. There are plenty of young doctors who are eager to begin practice here."

"Yes," burst out the doctor, "young upstarts who have a lot of newfangled surgical instruments and are eager to try every one of 'em on every case they get—anything from rheumatism to liver complaint! I was talking with one of 'em last winter, and he wanted me to swallow his latest contraption for operating on the throat with an electric searchlight and battery combined, and I don't know what all! What'll become of my people if these fellows are turned loose on 'em with their inventions? No, sir; I don't intend to turn 'em over to any such risks! Mines and providence are dangerous enough, but a new doctor with a lot of brand new instruments is too much even for Champion men."

"But you are all the time grumbling about the hard work, and when we arrange a good, easy place for you you won't take it," said Stuart, firing a parting shot as the doctor started toward the hall.

"Good, easy place! Stuart, you know I'd rather die from tumbling, Ajax and all, into an old shaft on my way to set Lew Treihven's leg the nineteenth time than petrify dead in the best hospital on earth!" retorted the doctor.

It is possible he will die that way some time, for under no persuasions would he consent to abandon his outdoor work on the ranges. After all, was it not out there that the doctor felt the love of humanity and its hunger for love? And nothing could ever satisfy him except that. The thought of turning over the people of his "parish," as he sometimes called it, to strangers, was a thought he could not endure. He had cared for them too long, and please God, he said to himself often as he tumbled through drifts and waded through gorges, he would still claim the privilege of calling them names and loving them.

So the short summer went swiftly by, and Stuart's plans matured so far as the building was concerned, but he confronted some new problem every day. It required all his growing steadiness of purpose, together with all of Rhena's great love for him, to keep him calm and hopeful. It was not such an easy matter to use God's money for the good of the people who were most in need of it. He had talked over a plan of profit sharing with Eric and some of the other miners, and it was one of many plans he determined to try in the near future. He was being hindered in his efforts to exercise what he had come to call his stewardship by the very men he was most eager to help. Many of the miners would not consent to any improvement in their cabins, and did not take kindly to Stuart's attempt at drainage. Added to all the rest was the ever present factor of the saloon, which never paused in its work of destruction, and stood as a constant force to tear down any and every good work.

But as the fall came on and the great building began to take form and the possibilities of the future for Champion grew upon him Stuart settled one fact very firmly and without vagueness. Whatever his plans might be and however much he might stumble and make mistakes in the days to come, he knew that his use of money or brains or property or whatever he possessed was a use the account of which he owed to God. He was fully persuaded that his stewardship was a sacred thing and a very vital part of his Christian faith, and he finally had a feeling of great peace as he rested on the conviction that he had dedicated all possessions to unselfish purposes for the good of humanity as far as God gave him strength and wisdom to work out the details. The special ways and means by which he was to dispense God's money was a matter which must be left to experiment and trial. The way in which the money should be used was not an important thing in comparison with his entire willingness to use it as his brother's keeper. He argued, and rightfully, that if men of capital once acknowledged that they were God's stewards and once were willing and eager to use money and talents to the glory of God's kingdom in the earth it would not be a difficult thing to find how best to do it. If a man wants to do God's will, the way to do it will very soon be found. The great need is that the man should first be eager to do the will.

The home he was building for Rhena and himself was built with the same idea which now pervaded his entire life. It was built for a home, but in such a way that its use would bless all Champion. If you visit Champion some day very soon, you will understand this better. No one can ever charge Stuart and Rhena with selfish or needless luxury. But every cent used in the building of their home was spent as if they were planning to receive as their most honored guest the Lord Jesus Christ and offer him a restful hospitality after a weary day spent in the world.

That was a memorable day in the history of Champion when the Hall of Humanity was completed. The miners had a holiday, and all day long the building was thronged in all its parts by the men and their families. In the evening Stuart had planned, with the help of Andrew and Eric, to have some exercises in the nature of dedicatory services in the great hall. He had gone down early, leaving Rhena with Louise, who had been more restless than usual that day. She had, as the doctor thought she might, lingered on through the summer, gradually failing. No one had noted her condition more carefully than Rhena. She staid with her until she became quiet, and at last left her in charge of a nurse and went down to join Stuart at the hall.

No one had noted her condition more carefully than Rhena.

The miners' band had been preparing for some time, at Stuart's request, to take part on this occasion. They marched into the hall early and took a position on the platform. The Salvation Army also proudly beat its way up the broad aisle, headed by the major, who, while in doubt as to the expediency of moving into his new quarters without first breaking some of the furniture to make things look just right, had finally consented to try it as it was, and if it was too good, Stuart had arranged for the lease of the old army hall again.

The doctor had been caught after a long chase up into the hills, and Stuart had insisted on his being on the platform, but could not prevail on him to offer any remarks.

"I'm no speaker. Don't ask me, Stuart. If any of the audience are sick or feel bad after you and Eric and Andrew have talked to 'em, I'll do my best for 'em; but I would only perform an operation on their skulls without using an anaesthetic if I tried to talk. It would be too painful for us all. I'll agree to yell at any good points the rest of you make, if I can see 'em without a microscope."

Andrew spoke briefly on the value of the building and its opportunities for Christian service, dwelling on the fact that it was not money that would make the plan successful, but live Christian men and women, who put their hearts into the work that the hall was to represent.

Eric followed with a very strong speech. He was coming out of his disappointment and bitterness, and was almost as popular with the men as before. If he develops he will be a stronger leader than he once ever thought of being. He declared his intention of still remaining where he was in the mines. At the close he took advantage of his opportunity to say some beautiful things of Stuart.

Stuart was the last speaker, and it was an occasion of a lifetime for any man. He was profoundly moved as he faced that audience. It was the same audience he had seen at the meetings in the square, at the railroad station, at the park and in the hall at De Mott, the same rough, stolid, impassive crowd, with here and there a face that lighted up at some human touch as Andrew and Eric had moved it. It was the same, and yet it was different. To Stuart it spoke of opportunities. He saw humanity so differently now.

He spoke well; very simply and in manly fashion. Rhena, proud and happy, felt that admiration for this strong handsome man, her husband, which always adds to the depth and beauty of the love of man and wife. More than once the tears came as she listened to the way Stuart talked, voicing in a very plain fashion his great desire for the common brotherhood. The men listened with the most breathless interest. When he finished, there was a hearty cheer, which was caught up again and again, while Stuart, overcome by his feelings, sat back and covered his face with his hands.

It seemed a very natural thing then for Rhena to ask all to bow their heads during a prayer. It seemed to the people that nothing could more fitly close such a day and such an occasion than Rhena herself kneeling there, with all the Salvation Army kneeling, as they used to do, around her. She had never prayed so earnestly and truly for the life abundantly to be given to them all. Even while Rhena was still upon her knees, the audience, without knowing all the reason for it, felt that this building was consecrated in a very solemn and profound sense to the humanity in honor of which it was named. And Andrew, seeing that the time had come to close the services, pronounced the benediction.

At the same hour in which Rhena had knelt down before that great silent crowd of miners the doors of the drawing room in Aunt Royal's mansion in New York were being thrown open to one of the first events of the society season. There were gathered the butterflies of the world, diamonds and silks, sweet music and laughter; vanity of vanity, adorned with the impressive power always apparent in a display of rich leisure, danced and ate and drank and gossiped as if the world was all play and the main business of every man and woman was to be as free from trouble and sacrifice as possible. Aunt Royal was at her best; the trip abroad had given her jaded nerves a needed repose and she was ready now for another season of gayety.

"By the way," asked a young man during the evening, who had been abroad several months, "where is that charming niece of yours, Louise Duncan, who used to visit you occasionally?"

Aunt Royal paled a little. "You did not know she is quite an invalid? Yes. She is living with her brother in Champion. It is doubtful if she survives the winter. The winters in Champion are horrible. I spent one there and it nearly killed me."

"Ah, we are thankful it was only one winter. How could we have spared you here in New York?" was the gallant reply.

Aunt Royal smiled at the compliment, and the gay company, its elegance, its flowers, its perfume, its happy carelessness of the world's woe, almost shut out the picture of that agonizing figure that kneeled one night over there close by that beautiful woman at the piano and begged for— But strike up the music faster, faster; let us eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow we die.

The musicians at Aunt Royal's had begun the soft, dreamy waltzes just as Stuart and Rhena came into the library of the Duncan house at Champion. They had been sent for in haste by the nurse, who had noted a serious change in Louise as the evening drew on. They went at once into the bedroom.

It did not need the doctor's presence already there, nor the stern look on his face, to tell them that the end was near. Louise was partly raised on pillows, and her eye glowed with the fever of madness that had all along been consuming her.

"Come!" she cried peevishly, "we shall be late. Don't you hear the clock striking?" It made every one in the room start to hear the great clock in the hall just at that moment strike 11.

"Come, give me my gloves and fan, and tell Jem to drive around at once. Be careful of my dress! Do I look right? The dances will be started. We shall miss the first. How slow you are! I wanted lilies of the valley, and you sent up the freisias. I don't think they are a bit pretty. Doctor, you said not to leave off my cloak when I went out to the carriage. It seems cold! What is the matter? Hark, I hear the music! Why don't they play faster? It is not fast enough."

She stopped talking, and her eyes opened wider. She seemed to see what the rest did not. Then she cried in a terrible voice: "Aunt Royal! Hal! I am going mad! I am mad! Doctor, doctor, save me!"

She fell back, and the doctor shuddered and for a second buried his face in his hands. Stuart never saw him do that before. When he lifted his head, no one asked what the end would be, for it had already come. She had died, as the doctor had really supposed she would, suddenly and painlessly. Her life had gone out like a candle flame in a winter night, when the great door of the mansion is swiftly opened and the belated owner of the house is met by the servant in the hall.

"Tell the musicians to play a little faster," said Aunt Royal a few minutes later, and they did so.

When morning began to come in gray and cold, Stuart was standing by the window of the bedroom as he had stood about a year before when his father died. Louise lay there, now that the life had gone, her face almost as beautiful as when Stuart saw her on his return from Europe. The jewels were still about her neck and the bracelets on her wrists, while the freisias of which she had complained lay across her bosom.

Stuart was looking out of the window. A crowd of miners had come down the road and was standing silently in front of the mansion. He saw them there, and even in his grief he respected their purpose in coming thus early to show their sympathy before they went on down to their day's work.

He went out to the hall.

Creamery Inspector B. D. White says that the butter output of Minnesota this year will exceed that of any previous year. The early, warm weather gave good pasturage for the cows and the spring buttermaking attained large proportions. Now the warm weather and the flies have cut down the output somewhat, but not enough to affect the result.

Congressman James A. Tawney has received official notification from Washington that the Winona normal school can appoint two teachers for service in the Philippines. The jury in the case of Dr. Wintner, on trial at Granite Falls for murder in the first degree, brought in a verdict of not guilty. Wintner killed William Lenard, a gambler, on April 15 last, because the latter refused to return money he had won from the former.

Sheriff Diekman of Wabasha county has agreed to a settlement without the aid of the commission of inquiry named by Governor Van Sant. Diekman will deposit to the credit of the county a sum equal to the amount involved in the tax bills upon which he failed to make returns. The county commissioners will go over the list and determine the sum due. When this has been done the governor will revoke the order for suspension.

Ole Knuseth, residing near Duluth, who for 14 years has been a victim of leprosy, put an end to his misery by hanging himself. Several years ago the man was sent by St. Louis county to an isolated farm several miles from Duluth, on one corner of which a hut was built for him. The past few months the disease has been affecting the unfortunate man's sight, and although he might have existed a number of years, a few weeks longer and he would have been totally blind.

COUNTY DIVISION AGAIN.

G. W. Peck, of Argyle, and W. E. Wood, of Warren, two county commissioners from Marshall county, were in the city last week. Asked as to the sentiment in the western portion of Marshall county regarding the matter of forming a new county out of the eastern part of Marshall county and the northern part of Red Lake county they stated that there would be no opposition. In fact the people of the western end desire to let the east half off any time it desires to go.—Thief River Falls News.

The people of Thief River Falls ought to bestir themselves if they expect to bring the division proposition to a vote at the next general election, which is but a little over a year hence. A proposition which interests and effects two counties of the combined size of Red Lake and Marshall can not be conceived and carried out in a day. On the other hand a vast amount of work lies before the community which has the temerity to tackle such an undertaking. It took Red Lake Falls ten years to succeed in the Polk county division project, and the perseverence of McIntosh, which has been sorely tested during the past eight years is another illustration. If the people of Marshall county are in any measure favorable, Thief River Falls is fortunate in the outset, and she should not let the grass grow under her feet, inasmuch as Red Lake Falls will swing her influence in favor of a plan which does not divest us of too much territory. We stand ready to concede a reasonable territory for a proposed new county with Thief River Falls as the county seat. With Red Lake Falls and Thief River Falls united on the issue, the vote of Red Lake county could be counted on, and if the people of the upper Falls do not formulate plans and prepare in due time for the test of the issue at the polls a year from next November, they simply will have let slip by a golden opportunity.

IN THE NEM NINTH.

Politics will be merry enough next year in the new ninth congressional district. Swift ones are being groomed for the congressional nomination in the Republican party, and the primaries will not tell the tale until after some tall hustling has been indulged in. Under the new law no convention will be held, but the nomination will be by ballot at the primaries, a plurality of the vote cast being required to nominate. This puts the interest above par. It is a novel situation, something before untried, and the element of mystery will give the political game that exquisite flavor which is relished even by the most disinterested. To-date four candidates have bobbed up very conspicuously. One of these is no less a personage than Halvor Steenerson, of Crookston. It is a well known fact that harmony among the Crookston Republicans is best fostered by a high board fence, and Steenerson's friends are not on both sides of the fence. Halvor would almost admit himself, we think, that he would long since have done something formidable in the way of a congressional hustle had it not been for the local jealousies that appear whenever his name was mentioned. He ran for mayor once against A. D. Stephens, the other big G. O. P. man of Crookston, and each claimed to be entitled to the votes of the loyal Republicans. Only one of them was elected. We believe it was Stephens. But that does not matter. It illustrates the difficulties that confront Steenerson in the start.

A. Grindeland, of Warren, is another candidate. He is no mixer. He is not cut out for crafty political wire pulling. He has served the people of his district in the state senate, and so well that perhaps no man in the new ninth stands better than he. He is dignified, refined and capable. He would make an ideal representative, but we don't see how either he or Steenerson can win, dividing the strength of their corner of the district, for the benefit of southern candidates.

S. G. Comstock, of Moorhead, wants to be it. He has a good standing but we do not expect to see him cut much figure.

Ezra Valentine, of Breckenridge, Wilkin County, is the formidable candidate. He has just presented a $1.000 check to the State Drainage board for current expenses, and if he keeps this kind of thing up the other fellows might as well hang up their fiddles and bows.

The Minneapolis Journal sizes the situation up like this: "Otter Tail county comes pretty near holding the key to the situation. The largest county in the district, it will have no candidate unless Elmer Adams should come out, as has been suggested. Otter Tail cast 3.018 republican votes last year, and with four candidates in the field, could just about name the nominee. Adams has declared that he will be neutral in the primary election contest, but when it comes to a point where he can name the winner, he is likely to take a hand again."

It must be remembered, however, that there will be no convention, with delegates herded by good shephards with programs up their sleeves. The voters will nominate as well as elect after this.

Facts and Fancies.

The First National Bank of Argyle has been incorporated.

Rev. Fr. Fataux has joined the Modern Woodman camp at Warren, R. I.

Oct 3, 4 and 5 are the days set for the Norman county fair. The date of the Red Lake county fair has not been set.

The funds are insufficient to make ends meet, no money to pay the bills—this is the aftermath of the Northern Minnesota Firemen's Tournament at Bemidji.

Twelve teachers will be employed in the Thief River Falls school next year. The crazy-path work district plan has been superseded by one united district, thanks to the good leadership of Supt. JamesA. Wilson, who is an up-to-date educator, and who has been re-elected by the board.

The Northern Pacific bridge across the Mississippi at Brainerd has been tested and found all right. The bridge has just been completed after a year's work, but during all that time not a single train has been delayed. During the course of construction the old bridge was removed piece by piece until the new one was put in.

Ralph Rogers of Lambert reports the Lambert and Garnes cheese factories doing well with the latter forging ahead so rapidly that it is now turning out nearly as much of the finished product as the Lambert factory, though neither of them are as yet receiving nearly as much milk as local conditions and circumstances warrant.

There has been a remarkable transformation scene in the western part of North Dakota in the past two weeks. The great cattle ranges that three weeks ago were brown and sere with stunted grass are now waving with green grass ten and twelve inches in height, and the winter's hay crop is assured. In addition to this, there is ample range food for all cattle, and beef will be shipped to market in prime condition this season. The ranchman and stockowners were in a more dangerous situation from the drought than the farmers in the central and eastern part of the state, as with the continuance of the drought their entire sustenance was gone and there would have been forced sales of stock at a sacrifice.

There is a probability that all the lumber camps in the northern part of the state will be burned down this summer by order of the board of health. During the past two winters the many camps have been the breeding places of smallpox, and it is found that the disease will develop in more deadly form next winter unless heroic measures are taken for its suppression. This project has been in the minds of the state board for some time, and has been broached before.

A grand reproduction of a Swedish county fair is at present being planned in Minneapolis by the Scandinavian Literary and Dramatic Society. It is going to be called the Veranmo Marknad, and will represent this oldest and best known fair ground in Sweden, which has during more than four hundred years existed at a point of exchange for horses, cattle and all kinds of agricultural products where the population from the surrounding districts and even from across the Norwegian frontier met every fall to trade and deal with each other.

Mrs. Jerome Longtin, the vegetable woman, was on deck bright and early last Saturday, June 29, with new potatoes. Mrs. Longtin started out with the good and noble resolution of presenting the editor of this paper with a mess. But she comes through the city from the east and we live in the west end. Needless to say she was held up before reaching our abode, and all we will ever know of the merits of those potatoes, (which we must admit were very early, and must have gone fine with new peas,) will be from tradition.

Three hundred and ninety five documents were recorded in Register of Deeds Gibeau's office during the month of June. Of these 103 were warranty deeds, 14 quit claim deeds, 15 contracts for deeds, 62 mortgage deeds, 77 satisfactions, and 124 miscellaneous. This illustrates the activity of the real-estate market in the county, and the satisfactions recorded, it will be seen, outnumber the mortgages given. It has been found necessary to build on a room between the vault and the register's office. This has long been a pressing need, and will prove a safeguard for the records, as well as relieving the recording force from overcrowding and disturbance.

Insect Comes to the Rescue.

The Polk county grasshoppers have gotten as far east as Gentilly, and our Red Lake county farmers had better lay low, ready to fire (with the dosers) when the white's of the enemies' eyes appear 'round the corners of the fields. But there are reasons for hoping that the grasshopper scare is at an end. Reports are to the effect that a red insect is destroying the hoppers by the million. The late Prof. Lugger reported the discovery of such a parasite which he alleged would avert any devastation by grasshoppers, and during the last two years he has devoted much attention to establishing these parasites in various parts of the state. Thus his good work lives after him.

Eddy Interviewed.

Minneapolis Journal: Congressman Frank M. Eddy, who was at the Nicollet last night was visited during the evening by several local politicians. Mr. Eddy is paying special attention to the opening of the Red Lake reservation. The secretary of the Interior has promised to send an agent to confer with the Indians and endeavor to make an agreement for the cessionasion of this tract. It is expected that Maj. James H. McLaughlin, Indian inspector, will be selected to do this work. If he is successful, the matter will be taken up by the next congress. The tract comprises in all 1,574 acres of fine agricultural land. Mr. Eddy says there is no move being made toward opening the White Earth reservation. He says that in his opinion Cuba will ultimately be annexed on her own request.

Selects Score Again.

The Red Lake Falls and McIntosh nines came together on the home diamond Monday afternoon and played a game that lacked spirit. The McIntosh team started out in dashing style, but did not keep it up scoring their one lone tally in the first inning. Red Lake Falls had a new man behind the bat, and he proved a good catcher.

Thoele pitched. The battery for the visitors was Andrews pitcher, Wood catcher. The score by innings.

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
Red Lake Falls	0	0	3	0	5	0	2	0	0	-10

Of the ten tallies for the home team, Smith scored 1, Pouliot 2, Healy 2, LaChapelle 1, Wyer 2, Coenen 1, Thoele 1.

Neil brought in the single tally for McIntosh.

The Selects are building up a good record, winning two games out of three. Today they play twice, at St. Hilaire in the morning and at Thief River Falls in the afternoon.

WINTNER ACQUITTED

SURPRISING VERDICT IN SENSATIONAL MURDER TRIAL AT GRANITE FALLS.

Happy Culmination of a Threatened Tragedy at Pelican Rapids—Rains Cause a Suspension of Work on the Mesaba Range—Duluth Leper Ends a Miserable Existence—General State News.

Granite Falls, Minn., July 1.—The jury in the case of Dr. Wintner, on trial for murder in the first degree, brought in a verdict of not guilty. The citizens are very indignant over the result and many threats are made against both Wintner and the jury. A warrant for Wintner for robbery in the first degree has been issued, but the officers are unable to make the arrest, as Wintner has disappeared.

The crime for which Wintner was tried was that of having shot and killed William Lenard on the morning of April 15 last. Lenard was a professional gambler from Iowa who had been in Granite Falls for the purpose of plying his trade for a week previous to the shooting and had played cards with Wintner. Wintner, on Sunday afternoon, April 14, invited Lenard, another gambler named F. Mullane and some others to his dental rooms to play poker. The game went along until supper time, when they took a recess, commencing again about 8 o'clock. The game continued until a little after 2 o'clock, when Wintner went into his operating room adjoining. When he came out he had a revolver in his hand and pointing it at Lenard demanded that he give him back the money he had won from him, saying he had cheated him. Lenard made a rush for the door and Wintner fired two shots, both taking effect, causing death several hours later.

ENDS IN MARRIAGE.

Happy Culmination of Threatened Tragedy.

Fergus Falls, Minn., June 28.—The happy culmination of what threatened to be a serious tragedy took place at Pelican Rapids this week in the marriage of Bernt L. Ophus and Miss Tilia Sjogren. Two years ago the young lady wished to break off the engagement and returned Mr. Orphus a ring which he had given her. The two were attending a Fourth of July picnic at the time, and the young man, feeling that life was not worth living, retired to a secluded spot and endeavored to commit suicide. He shot himself in the breast, but the bullet struck a rib and glanced off. The crowd rushed to his rescue, but he stood it off and sent another bullet into his body and fell unconscious. Medical aid restored him to health, the young lady repented of her refusal and the wedding followed.

MINES FLOODED.

Rain Causes Suspension of Operations on Mesaba.

Duluth, June 25.—The worst rain and thunder storm that Duluth has suffered for years was raging here from midnight Sunday to late Monday. For eight or ten hours the lightning was practically continuous, and the rain was very heavy. More than three inches fell and the streams and ponds were filled to overflowing. Gutters overflowed, and there was a large amount of damage to streets and cellars, which filled full of water. All rivers in this section are filled bank full, and there is a very considerable loss of logs, which have stranded back in the woods. The mines of the Mesaba have been flooded and there is much loss there, especially at a few of the open-pit properties. All outside work has been suspended for the time being.

SUICIDE OF LEPER.

Ole Knuseth Hangs Himself on Farm Near Duluth.

Duluth, June 29.—Ole Knuseth, who for 14 years has been a victim of leprosy, put an end to his misery last night by hanging himself. Several years ago the man was sent by the county to an isolated farm several miles from the city on one corner of which a hut was built for him.

The past few months the disease had been affecting the unfortunate man's sight and although he might have existed a number of years, a few weeks longer and he would have been totally blind. His body was found hanging from a rafter of his home, while a note was left in Norwegian to the effect that he was "glad it would soon be over."

WEDDING GUESTS POISONED.

Drank Coffee Cooked in a Copper Washboiler.

Caledonia, Minn., July 1.—The guests at the Blazen-Schweibach wedding supper held at the bridegroom's parents' residence, six miles west of here, were seriously affected. The cause is supposed to be from drinking coffee cooked in a copper washboiler. About 100 are affected with cramps in the stomach and bowels, and many are in a very serious condition.

Scores County Officers.

St. Paul, June 26.—The Ramsey county grand jury has submitted a report to Judge Lewis severely arraigning County Auditor W. R. Johnson and Commissioner E. B. Lott and recommending their impeachment or removal from office for mismanagement of the affairs of the county.

AFTER THE RAILROADS.

Minneapolis Business Men Charge Discrimination.

Minneapolis, June 26.—At a meeting of representative business men held at the Commercial club to discuss alleged discrimination of railroads against Minneapolis in favor of Chicago and St. Paul, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that the future welfare and prosperity of Minneapolis depends upon the development of a greater interest on the part of all its citizens in the general questions pertaining to a city's growth.

"That our city council and others in authority are urged to decline to grant privileges or concessions to railroads which are not willing to do everything in their power to reciprocate such favors and show their appreciation of our importance as a commercial center by assisting us in every way in their power to obtain an adjustment of freight rates both in and out of this city which will give us the rights in competition with Chicago to which our geographical position entitles us, and also, so far as possible, adjust the running of passenger trains and the expense of management as to apportion their favors fairly between Minneapolis and St. Paul on the basis of the relative value of the two cities as sources of revenue to said roads."

A BIG WHEAT CROP.

Minnesota and the Dakotas Will Harvest 200,000,000 Bushels.

Chicago, June 28.—After making a careful canvass of the Northwest territory and preparing conservative estimates upon the conditions found throughout the grain belt, traffic officials of the St. Paul, the Northwestern, the Northern Pacific, the Great Northern and the Burlington systems are agreed that the wheat crop of this region for 1901 will break all previous records. According to the estimates of these officials it is claimed that the two Dakotas and Minnesota alone will harvest between 185,000,000 and 200,000,000 bushels of wheat, as against 100,000,000 last year. The greatest previous yield of wheat in the three states named was in 1898, when 175,000,000 bushels were harvested.

The Record-Herald, in an explanation of this year's enormous crop, says:

"The crop cannot be termed a 'bumper' crop, as the enormous increase is due largely to the fact that various railroad companies have within the last two years made extreme efforts toward colonization of the Northwest territory, and as a result extensive additions have been made to the total of cultivated lands and grain acreage."

SAYS IT IS BLACKMAIL.

Man Arrested in Duluth for Alleged Murder in Michigan.

Duluth, June 28.—William Gronlz, alias La Joie, wanted by the sheriff of Bay City for murder, was arrested here during the afternoon. Nothing is known here of the crime except the sheriff's telegram asking the arrest. Gronlz, however, says that it is a case of blackmail to extort money from his father, who is a saloonkeeper at Bay City. His peculiar story of the crime is that a young boy named Delorme annoyed him one day last November and he grew mad and pushed him. A few days later the boy sickened and died of pneumonia, he says, but he was held responsible. He left town and has been a fugitive ever since.

TIMBER TO BE SOLD.

Part of Black Hills Forest Reserve Ravaged by Insects.

Washington, July 1.—General Land Commissioner Hermann has recommended the sale of 25 square acres of timber in the Black Hills forest reserve, near Deadwood, S. D. It has been discovered that many trees are dying from the ravages of an insect, resembling the army worm species.

TWO CHILDREN DIED.

Fatal Gasoline Explosion at St. Francis, Minn.

Anoka, Minn., June 25.—A gasoline stove explosion set fire to Charles Cleveland's home in St. Francis, and before Mrs. Cleveland could reach her two babies in the adjoining room, fire cut off their escape, and their charred bodies were found later. The mother was terribly burned, but will live.

Northwestern Flour Output.

Minneapolis, June 27.—According to The Northwestern Miller the flour output at Minneapolis last week was 317,375 barrels, compared with 231,045 barrels for the corresponding week in 1900. Superior and Duluth ground 16,300 barrels. Flour sales of local mills, while not exceeding the output last week, did not equal those in the preceding week. There was a radical change in the character of the trade, with most mills, in that last week foreigners were largely out of the market, while the domestic trade were quite good buyers.

FATHER AND SON DEAD.

Result of a Bitter Neighborhood Feud at Dayton, Ia.

Fort Dodge, Ia., July 1.—A bitter neighborhood feud caused the death of C. D. Guild and his 19-year-old son, Clarence, at Dayton, Ia. They were riddled with bullets from a shotgun in the hands of a man believed to be Oliver Bricker, one of a family of neighbors. Bricker's story is that he was first attacked by the Guilds. Bricker was shot three times, but his wounds are slight. Oliver Bricker and his brother George, who was present during the shooting, were arrested.

We have 19 tracts aggregating over 1000 acres, scattered through the best portions of the oil districts of Jefferson and Hardin Counties, Texas, two of which are near the great gushers which have made Beaumont famous.

Having determined to obtain a gusher if possible, we are now boring a well on land just purchased on Spindle Top Hill, only 600 feet southeast of the famous "Beatty Gusher," which sold for $1,250,000, and 600 feet northeast of the Hogg-Swayne gusher which has just come in; practically between the two. This land cost a large sum and is considered sure gusher land. No gusher has yet been obtained in Texas except on this hill and no well driven on it has failed to be a gusher, producing in the neighborhood of 70,000 barrels a day. This purchase reduces the speculative element in this venture to the minimum; practically eliminates it.

For development purposes we are now offering a limited amount of treasury stock at 25 cents a share; par value $1.00. The price will soon be advanced.

We feel safe in recommending the purchase of this stock, believing we will obtain at least enough oil to pay good dividends on its cost, and expect to and believe we will obtain a gusher within 90 days, which will at once make it worth many times what it cost you.

"Tarry Thou Till I Come."

"The Wandering Jew" is having a wonderful revival in literature lately. The first book in this fascinating field was "Salathiel," by Geo. Croly, Christ's words to whom, "Tarry thou till I come," spoken beneath the weight of the cross to the scoffing Pharisee, sets the Jew wandering. Most notable followers of this story were Eugene Sue's masterpiece, and "The Prince of India," by the author of "Ben Hur." General Wallace himself praises Croly's "Salathiel" as one of the six greatest novels ever written. One New York publisher has lately issued an illustrated edition at $1.40 net. Now comes John B. Alden, so well known as the pioneer in cheap book publishing, with an excellent edition at 25 cents: even this, with a view to widely extending the knowledge of his publications, he offers to mail postpaid to the readers of The Gazette for the nominal price of 12c. If they will order at once, and mention this paper. Doubtless, many will accept his offer. Address John B. Alden, Publisher, 442 Pearl St., New York.

TRI-STATE DRAINAGE.

AN INTERESTING MEETING TO BE HELD IN FARGO JULY 16-18.

SOMETHING OF THE WORK BEING DONE TO PREVENT FLOODS.

The Tri-State Drainage Association of Minnesota, North and South Dakota will meet in Fargo, N. D., July 16, 17 and 18, 1901. This is the third annual meeting of the above association, which was organized at White Rock, S. D., in 1899; the second annual meeting was held at Grand Forks, N. D., May 10, 1900.

The Minnesota section of the association held a meeting at Crookston, Minn., Jan. 17, 18 and 19, 1901. At both the Grand Forks and the Crookston meetings the following resolution was adopted unanimously:

Whereas, There now reside in the Valley of the Red River of the North and its tributaries, nearly 1,000,000 of people, and the valuation of the property therin approximates $1,000,000,000: and

Whereas, Over 20,000,000 of acres embraced in said area are not only assessed, but subject to damage and overflow during the high water seasons, and the lives of the residents thereof endangered by fevers and kindred diseases resulting therefrom, and

Whereas, the loss, (lives not considered,) as a result of said overflows and lack of proper drainage and flowage of water, has for many years averaged approximately the sum of $500,000 annually; and

Whereas, By the expenditure of the sum of $1,000,000 all necessary surveys could be made, and a system of locks, dams and reservoirs be constructed, and in addition thereto over 700 miles of waterways be opened to navigation; and

Whereas, The section of country to be benefited is capable of maintaining at least 5,000,000 of people, if the improvements herein suggested could be made: therefore,

Be It Resolved by the delegates in convention here assembled, representing each and every part of the territory embraced in the said Red River Valley of the North and its tributaries, which includes a part of North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota, congress of the United States be, and hereby is, petitioned and urgently requested to appoint a federal commission, consisting of three persons, one each from the States of North Dakota, South Dakota and Minnesota, to investigate the work and matters above mentioned, in conjunction with a committee from congress, and to report at the next session of that body.

Resolution adopted.

The above resolution was adopted unanimously by the legislature of Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

The disastrous floods of the Red River Valley are due to the ice jams which form in the Red River at or near the boundary line of the United States. The waters of the river in the southern portion of the Red River Valley break up much earlier than those in the northern portion.

There are three principal sources of the water supply to the Red River of the North: the most southerly one being that of Lake Traverse and the Bois de Sioux River: the second source of importance is the Otter Tail River, and the third Red Lake River.

At the meeting in Crookston, Minn., Jan. 19, 1901, Colonel R. Davenport, assistant United States engineer, located at St. Paul, Minn., delivered an address explaining the work that has been done by the engineering corps of the United States army up to that time. He made a report upon the survey of Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse, also upon the survey of the Otter Tail Lake, and of the Red Lake River and Red Lake: the survey of Red Lake as a probable reservoir shows that lake is ample of holding all of the water that would be liable to come to it during any flood period, so that source of water during the spring freshets would not be a contributor as heretofore. The survey of Otter Tail Lake shows that if the lake were not made into a reservoir it would not hold the water supply unless the lake level be raised as much as ten feet above its ordinary stage. He suggests that other lakes in the vicinity of Otter Tail Lake would also have to be included as reservoirs to assist in holding the water. In the survey made by United States Assistant Engineer W. C. Weeks in 1897, of Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse, Mr. Weeks showed that Lake Traverse is about eight feet higher than Big Stone Lake: he also proposes to construct a canal between the lakes so that Lake Traverse could be made to flow into Big Stone Lake: this would come to it from the Lake Traverse basin during flood period.

The Otter Tail River, about seventeen miles east of Breckenridge and Wahpeton is approximately one hundred feet higher than Lake Traverse according to Monograph 25 of the U. S. Geological Survey which refers especially to Glacial Lake Agassiz. Major William A. Jones made a preliminary examination of the Red River of the North Minnesota and its tributaries and Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverse in 1892. In his report to Brig. Gen. Thomas F. Casey, chief of engineers of the U. S. army he proposes that a canal be constructed from the Otter Tail River below Fergus Falls, Minn., across the country southwest to the Rabbit River can be made to flow into Lake Traverse, by either dredging the Bois de Sioux or constructing another canal at a higher level.

From the reports it can be seen that the disastrous floods of the Red River of the North that occur at varying periods of from three to five years destroying millions of dollars worth of property could be prevented if congress could be induced to make an appropriation for proper protection.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure Catarrh by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of Catarrh, has at last perfected a treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures Catarrh, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "Snuffles the guaranteed Catarrh Cure" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"Snuffles" is the only perfect Catarrh Cure ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve Hay Fever or Cold in the Head.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and as many more have been cured and made temperate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and relatives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they discontinued drinking of their own free will. [CONTINUED.]

"Tell the men to come up. I shall be glad to thank them," he said to a servant.

Rhena came in. "God has given you to me," he said, "else this would be more than I could bear," and he stood thus with his arm about her, and the tears of his humanity fell fast at the sight of that pale clay on the bed.

Then he turned toward the hall with his wife.

"God is merciful," she said. "He has given us something to live for. We will spend our all in doing his will."

"Yes," replied Stuart, "humanity, after all, is worth saving. It is worth living for. We are our brothers' keepers. There is nothing better in all the world than the love of God for his children, and the love of his children for one another." And with the words he went out and shut the door upon the dead and its past, and with the woman of his love by his side faced the living and its future.

THE END.

Her Antelope.

Stalking antelope among the Rockies may have its humorous as well as its thrilling side. Says Mrs. Seton-Thompson in "A Woman Tenderfoot."

We tied our horses on a dizzy height, and slide, Nimrod with a carbine, I with a rifle, along a treacherous, shaly bank which ended 25 feet below in the steep, rocky bluffs that formed the face of the cliff.

A misstep would have sent us flying, but I did not think of that. My only care was to avoid startling the shy, fleet footed creatures we pursued. I hardly dared to breathe. Every muscle and nerve was strained with long suspense.

Suddenly I clutched Nimrod's arm and pointed at an oblong, tan colored bulk 50 yards above us on the mountain.

"Antelope! Lying down!" I whispered.

Nimrod nodded and motioned me to go ahead. I crawled nearer, inch by inch, my gaze riveted. It did not move. I grew more elated. It was not so hard to approach an antelope after all. I felt astonishingly pleased at my performance. Then rattle! crash! and a stone went bounding down. I raised my rifle to get a shot before the swift animal should go flying away.

It was strangely still. I stole a little nearer and then turned and went gently back to Nimrod. He was convulsed with silent laughter. My elaborate stalk had been made on a nice buff stone!

Guessing a Cliff's Height.

Shortly after making the turn to the east and in the depths of a beautifully terraced canyon along the Rio Grande, writes Robert T. Hill in The Century, we came upon a copious hot spring running out of the bluff upon a low bench, where it made a large, clear pool of water. The sight of this natural bath of warm water was tempting to tired and dirty men, and here we made our first and only stop for recreation. After lunch most of the party proceeded to the warm pool, and, stripping, we literally soaked for hours in its delightful waters, stopping occasionally to soap and scrub our linen. While here the party indulged in guessing the height of the inclosing cliffs. The air was so clear in this country that one always underestimated the magnitude of the relief. None of our estimates exceeded 500 feet. Seeing a good place for the first time in all our course to scale the canyon walls, I climbed them and measured the exact height, which was 1,650 feet. The view from the summit was superb, revealing the panorama of the uplands, which is completely shut out while traversing the chasm below.

The Man and the Mule.

"Now," said the Man, "Corn is High, and I cannot afford to Feed It to A Mule. So the Proper Caper is to turn The Animal out to Browse and Let Him get any Old Diet he can Pick Up."

Then the Man took off His Coat and Hung it on the Fence while He went to get His Tools together to Sharpen them on The Grindstone.

"Haw, haw!" said the Mule. "Since I am to feed Myself I will Eat Early and Often, and for Fear that I might suffer the Pangs of Hunger I will Begin on That Coat."

So the Mule ate up the Man's Coat and Then feeling the Need of A Little Exercise he kicked the Grindstone to Pieces, and when the Man saw the Result of his Economy He said that He would Feed The Mule with Corn, no Matter how High the price Was, for it would be Cheaper than Coats.

Moral.—It is a Wise Mule that knows its Own Fodder.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Bill Nye and Wagner.

When Bill Nye was in Philadelphia in 1893, he visited the office of George W. Childs. At parting Mr. Childs asked the humorist to write a sentiment in his autograph album. Nye at once produced this: "Wagner's music is not as bad as it sounds."—Literary Era.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

Tip's Story.

I am a very wonderful cat. Eddie says so, and Eddie is the little boy who lives in my house, so he ought to know all about me. I can sit in the sun and pur, and Eddie thinks that is very funny—to hear me pur. I think myself it must be a great thing to do. Eddie can't pur at all, and I have heard him try a great many times.

One day I yowled and snarled and spit at a bad little dog who got into my house. He had no right to come into my house at all, but he did, and I scolded him well for it. I don't think he will do it again. And Eddie thought it was so fine for me to spit and yowl that he tried to do it himself. It didn't sound as well the way he did it, and his mamma told him that little boys shouldn't make noises like cats did. So then he stopped, but I think myself he stopped because he couldn't do it as well as I did and not because his mamma told him to.

Then, I can sing. You ought to hear me sing on our back fence every night. Everybody in the row looks out of the window to hear me. They make queer noises at me, too, trying to sing like me, but they never can do it. It is no use for them to try.—Lys Lovett in Brooklyn Eagle.

A Tree Home.

Near Marquette, Wis., an old man has lived several years in a tree home. He is a first class cabinet maker, and when he moved from Detroit to Marquette he took up his residence in the hollow trunk of a tree near that town. The tree is a huge linden that has been sawed off about 15 feet from the ground, and in it the occupant has brought to bear his accomplishments as a workman to decorate his queer abode artistically. A door and a window, seen from the outside, bear witness to this. The inner walls of the strange domicile are ceiled and papered and are covered with pictures. One circular seat extends around the room from door to window. There is on the other side a comfortable pile of furs that make a luxurious bed. The place is warmed when warmth is needed with an oil stove. The "hermit" plays 15 different musical instruments, and with these and books entertains himself and his visitors.—Golden Days.

King Edward's Toy Bulldog.

The diminutive bulldog whose portrait is presented in the accompanying illustration belongs to the king of England and is said to be such a favorite as to accompany his royal master wherever he goes. The king even takes the greatest interest in his pet's diet, sometimes attending to his wants himself, and Peter, as he is called, manifests the greatest affection for his friend. The illustration is from a portrait recently painted for his majesty by a well known artist, Miss Maud Earl.

Printing a Coin on Linen.

The print of a silver coin or medal may be made on silk or linen by dipping the fabric in a solution of nitrate of silver and stretching it over the face of the coin until the image is imprinted. The linen is sensitized by dipping it into a solution of nitrate of silver, made by dissolving 60 or 80 grains of nitrate of silver in one ounce of water. Wet the portion of the cloth which is to receive the impression in the solution, and when nearly dry draw it over the face of the coin and tie it at the back. Expose to a weak light and in a few minutes the raised design of the coin will appear on the linen. As soon as it is dark enough remove and wash in clear water. When nearly dry, iron it smooth with a warm iron, placing a piece of tissue paper over the print. In printing from the coin or medal it is advisable to paste a piece of paper on the reverse side, so that the silver will not come in contact with the sensitized fabric.

Have You Seen My Sheep?

In this game the players form a circle. One player walks around the outside, and, touching some one on the back, asks, "Have you seen my sheep?" The one questioned answers, "How was he dressed?" The dress of some player is then described, who, when he recognizes himself, must run around the outside of the circle and try to reach his own place before he's tagged by the questioner. If tagged, he is "it," and the questioner takes his place in the circle.

Picking the Plums.

In this game a line is drawn on the ground, along which each player places a certain number of marbles. At this line the players shoot their taws in turns from a given point. The marbles knocked off the line become the property of the striker, and the game continues until no marbles remain. The marbles should be placed as close together as possible without actually touching.

Germany's Human Mole

Strangest Of Murderers, Who Dug Tunnels With His Hands

Germany's most brutal murderer, Johann Bobbe, known as the "Human Mole," blew out his brains the other day just as the officers were about to seize him for his latest crime, the murder of a woman and two children.

Bobbe invariably reached his victims by tunneling through the earth like a mole. No skeleton keys or burglar's tools were necessary for this curious criminal, before whom no house could be effectually sealed, no victim shielded. In a day's time Bobbe could dig his way into the cellar of any house he chose to enter. A thin, weak looking fellow, his hands and arms were abnormally developed and his finger nails, thick and heavy, protruded clawlike from his hands.

After leaving the penitentiary 13 months ago, where he had been incarcerated for one of his many crimes, the mole murderer engaged in business as an insurance agent, reckoning that this capacity would open to him the doors of many private houses and would bring him into contact with people of means. His business—that is, the honest part of it—prospered beyond expectation, according to statements of the murderer's wife, yet this was powerless to dissuade him from his real purpose in life, crime. He was looking for victims. He found them three months ago in the persons of a man named Hemmling and a woman, Frau Stager, the latter a widow with two children.

Hemmling was the owner of a big farm in the center of the village of Mariendorf, a prosperous Berlin suburb.

The man trap was constructed in the southern wing of the Hemmling homestead in Mariendorf, a long brick building standing amidst fields, some ten miles' walk from the nearest house. Frau Stager had leased the southern wing for a dwelling, subletting one room on the ground floor to Bobbe.

One afternoon a few weeks ago Hemmling was seen running down the village street with blood streaming from his head and out of a wound in his back. He was taken to a physician and meeting a policeman on the way told him that Bobbe had shot him when he went to his room to inquire of the whereabouts of Mrs. Hemmling. Bobbe had discharged his revolver twice before he (Hemmling) could gain the door. The policeman thereupon ran toward the starting point of the horse cars going to Berlin, and as he expected found Bobbe, who was about to depart. When the police placed him under arrest, the would be assassin wrenched himself free, placed a revolver at his forehead and fired. He died instantly.

The policeman then went back to the Hemmling homestead and helped the members in their search for Mrs. Hemmling, who had not been seen since 11 o'clock in the morning. At the same time mounted gendarmes rode off in different directions to arrest Mrs. Stager. The latter was finally located coming from Berlin. She seemed unable to clear up the Hemmling mystery, but rather deepened it by making inquiries for her two little boys. Several people had seen them returning from school, but there was no trace of the little ones after that.

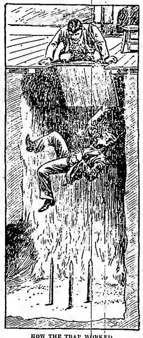
At last it was suggested that the children, hearing the shots, might have taken refuge under the roof, but this hope, like the rest, proved futile. Then the policeman summoned all present to Bobbe's room in order to take down their testimony. The apartment was reeking with the odor of blood, but there was also a strong smell of fresh earth. Some thought the odor was caused by the prevailing rain, but others discovered a number of sacks filled with soil under the bed and other furniture. While the people were yet speculating on their queer find the village blacksmith noticed that the iron plate in front of the stove bent in the center under footsteps. He got on his hands and knees to examine that part of the floor and to his utmost astonishment found that the plate moved on hinges. A spade was procured, and the trapdoor—for such it proved to be—was carefully opened.

SUICIDE OF THE MOLE.

They saw the mouth of a tunnel five feet deep and four and a half feet broad leading toward the yard, in the center of which was a manure heap peculiar to German farms. The fore part of this dugout was almost filled to the top with bodies.

The youngest son of Frau Stager lay on top, his dead hand clutching the hair of a larger body, that of Mrs. Hemmling. The latter was entirely nude. It was found to be pierced through and through by a two edged soldier's bayonet fast in the ground. The pike had gone through the middle of the body, causing immense loss of blood.

The body of the elder Stager boy was lying under that of Mrs. Hemmling. It had evidently been thrown into the trap before life was fully extinct, for in his death agony the poor child had clutched the earth with both hands.



HOW THE TRAP WORKED.

The woman's body showed seven shot wounds, four of which were fatal. Bobbe seems to have persuaded her to step on the trapdoor, which precipitated her into the depth below. While she was writhing in agony the boys returned from school, probably one after another, as children are likely to do, and as, unfortunately, they were witnesses of the first crime Bobbe resolved to murder them also. The youngest, the first to arrive, it seems, preceded his brother in death by a few moments. He was thrown first and stunned by a shot through the neck. The second boy met the same fate as he stepped into the room.

Bobbe seems to have closed the trap door after this act, thus covering up all outward traces of his crime for the time being. Then he sat down to await the coming of Hemmling, who was sure to drop in to inquire for his wife if she didn't turn up after some time. This calculation proved correct. Hemmling came and was invited to a cup of coffee. While drinking Bobbe cried, "Look at the ceiling; it's raining through."

While Hemmling looked up Bobbe fired at him twice from behind, a bullet grazing the back of his head. The frightened man started to run, but before he could reach the door he got a bullet in his side.

An engineer who surveyed the tunnel where the bodies were found for the state's attorney reported that the work of digging and bracing showed great skill and perseverance. He said five men, provided with proper implements, could not duplicate the work in three weeks' time, yet the "mole" murderer performed it during his off hours with his bare hands during the three months he spent on the farm at irregular intervals.

The crime for which Bobbe had been sent to prison eight years before was the attempted murder of a postman.

In the spring of 1889 Johann Bobbe opened a cigar store in the house 73 Birkenstrasse, Berlin.

Then he set to work to construct a man trap. He took up part of the floor of his shop and covered the opening, which was just large enough to admit the figure of a portly man, with a board that moved on hinges and could be sprung at will from behind the counter. Exactly under this trap he dug a hole in the cellar and at the bottom made fast several two edged broadswords. His idea was to entrap and kill on some opportune occasion rich customers or express messengers carrying large amounts of money who might drop in at the store to buy a cigar.

There was a postoffice in the neighborhood of Bobbe's store, and in Germany the postal authorities pay money orders by carriers who go from house to house delivering money in cash as well as letters containing large and small sums. The human mole addressed a money order calling for several marks to himself one evening, calculating that the carrier would deliver the cash between 8 and 9 next morning—that is, before he had occasion to visit many other customers of the postoffice.

To pay out the money the messenger would be required to stop before a certain desk placed alongside the trapdoor. This latter Bobbe meant to suddenly lower, or "spring," precipitating the official into the sword spiked excavation below. But this fine plan miscarried for the reason that on the morning when he was to be murdered the letter carrier appeared in company with several customers. Bobbe tried again, but every time he had the carrier in his power something happened that prevented him from springing the trap.

AS TO GRASSHOPPERS.

A letter from Prof. E. B. Forbes, state entomologist, says:

The State Entomologist of Minnesota is very anxious that the county commissioners in the counties in which the grasshoppers have done damage should cooperate with him in getting before the people, in as forcible a manner as possible, the facts concerning the grasshopper plague, and the methods for combating this destructive pest. We now have the destructive, migratory Rocky Mountain grasshopper in every county along the western border of Minnesota, from Wilkin county to Kittson county and also in Otter Tail county. They are present in many localities in numbers sufficient to do great damage to crops, and if allowed to multiply in stubble fields this year, the number next year ought to be great enough to cause a complete destruction of crops in the Red River Valley, and a general locust plague in other parts of the state. The whole difficulty in dealing with these pests in the community, is that we have no law under which concerted action may be enforced. It is essential that all should act together in order that anything like satisfactory results may be obtained. The whole hopper difficulty of this year and in all years, except the rare ones in which we are visited by great swarms of grasshoppers from other regions, has its root in the common practice of summer fallowing. We take the liberty of suggesting and even of urging that the county commissioners of all the counties of the Red River Valley take any and all possible means of getting before the people of their counties, in the most forcible manner, these facts and the recommendation that they do not allow their fields to stand idle. This practice costs the state many thousands of dollars annually. I would suggest that the county commissioners would adopt resolutions regarding this matter and that these resolutions be given the widest circulation possible in all the county papers, in postoffices and other public places, and that they provide for a supervision of the plowing of all stubble fields and other places containing grasshopper eggs this coming fall. Let me most earnestly commend this matter to you as worthy of very serious and decisive consideration.

FOR BETTER TRAIN SERVICE.

The movement started to secure a passenger train independent of freight on this branch of the Great Northern should be seconded by every resident of Red Lake Lake county. Especially should the business men and shippers interest themselves, and if this is done there is every reason to believe the effort will be crowned with success. The business of this line warrants the improved service, but we will not get it without vigorous effort. In this connection the Thief River Falls Press says:

Now is the time for all business men and shippers on this branch of the Great Northern railway to pull together and make a respectful protest to the railway authorities which will result in a passenger train service independent of freight. The largest shipper is this city is back of a movement to arouse the people and petitions are now being prepared for circulation to that effect. Let us all be in earnest in this matter and the town and county will be benefited.

Up at Warren they had such a row over a ball game with Hallock that Rev. Franklin was called in to pour oil on the troubled waters. The matter will be arbitrated, and the prospects are for another game between the two nines.

GRINDELAND.

In view of the candidacy of A. Grindeland for congressman to represent the new ninth district, the following laudation from the Crookston Times, (Dem.) is interesting:

The upper portion of the Red River Valley appears to have been very fortunate in the selection of some of its members, judging by results. In the upper house, it would seem that Senator Grindeland of Marshall county is entitled to first honors for effective work in securing legislation of general interest to the state and more particularly in measures having direct interest to this section of Minnesota. His vote on the gross earnings and the primary election bills were in accord with the views of the majority of the people of the state, and he was the author of a practical measure providing for a complete system of construction of county drainage, to take the place of the defective law under which counties have heretofore labored. The weight of his influence was considerable in securing the appropriation to increase the effectiveness of the work of the experiment station here, in which he has always felt a great interest. He rendered valuable assistance in securing the passage of the bill for the$50,000 of a drainage appropriation and in many other measures his efforts have been exerted in a manner that merits the hearty approval of the residents of the upper country. The representatives from Polk county always found him ready to co-operate with them in securing meritorious legislation.

Referring to the statement of the Thief River Falls News to the effect that the people of the western end of Marshall county desire to let the east half off any time it desires to go, the Warren Register says:

Since the above appeared in the News we have not seen Commissioner Peck, but we have interviewed Commissioner Wood with regard to it, and he says there is absolutely nothing in it. Not only did he not hold any conversation at all with the editor of the News, but he has never at any time expressed the sentiments that the News attributes to him. Bro. Eastman has been imposed upon by some over-zealous friends of Thief River Falls' county division plan.

Facts and Fancies.

The Saturday Evening Post rises to remark that the two most popular books of the day are the check book and the pocketbook.

W. F. Street is indorsed. The Leon correspondent wants him for congressman. For further information, see the Bemidji Pioneer.

The Bemidji band of twenty members will join the Modern Woodmen in a body. The goat on hearing what was before him, dropped dead.

A Winona man went away from home and left his wife and children to shift for themselves. He was gone about two weeks, when he returned. He bought a dime's worth of steak and took it home with him. The family received him with open arms. It was so much more than he had ever done before that they gladly took him in, and now they love him as if he had always remained true.

Do you know, Mr. Loafer, that you are one of the most despicable individuals on earth? Don't for the world deceive yourself into believing that you are the only pebble on the beach, the only fish in the swim, for if you do you will wake up some morning to a terrible realization of the fact that you are a worthless and insignificant clam. When you are gone and the haunts that knew you once know you no more forever, no ripple of sorrow will be visible on the social, religious or political sea. You flatter yourself that you are of considerable importance in the world and you are—in your own estimation, but mark our words, few will take note of your departure, and they only to express their gratification that you had sense enough to die.

A fellow who couldn't spare a dollar for his home newspaper a year, sent fifty 2-cent stamps to the city to find out "how to raise beets," and received a postal card reply, "take hold of the tops and pull." This fellow is a near relative of the man who sent a dollar to find out how to make money, and received a reply telling him to "get a job in the mint." He also was related to the man who sent a dollar to find out "how to write without pen or ink," and was told to "write with a pencil."

A Missouri editor who had bucked bids on job printing until exasperated, feels better since moved to publish the following: "The editor of this paper is soon to buy a shirt. Strange and extravagant as it may seem, we have determined to do so. With this end in view we wish the dealers to submit sealed bids, so that the job may be let to the lowest bidder. Quality and style don't count. Any old thing will do. Send in your bids."

It isn't best to be too sensitive in this rough-and-tumble world. Don't allow yourself to worry over what people say about you. No matter what you say or do, it will appear different to different eyes. One will pronounce it just the right thing, while others will denounce it wholly bad. At best you can please only a certain few while a great many don't know what you are doing and don't care. Do what you think is best under the circumstances and let the result be what it may.

TOOK HIS WAD.

THAT IS THE STORY LAWRENCE BEGION TOLD YESTERDAY.

HAD $160 IN CURRENCY WHICH WAS SWIPED AT HIS HOTEL.

Lawrence Begion, who has been working on the drive and came to town with a neat little roll, says $160 was taken out of his pocket while he was in his room at the Palace hotel, Tuesday afternoon.

Begion did not complain to the authorities until yesterday morning; as he was in hopes of recovering the money, but a search proved fruitless. It seems he went to his room about noon on Tuesday, under the influence of liquor, and although he was in a rather dilapidated state, he claims to remember some things quite vividly, and was anxious to have warrants sworn out for the arrest of parties whom he claims to suspect. The matter is being looked into by the county attorney.

Money in Texas Oil.

We call attention to the announcement in this paper of the Texas Standard Oil Company. This is an uncommon speculative enterprise in that the chances of success are so good that one wonders why they do not cost more.

The Texas Standard Oil Co. is officered and managed by St. Paul business men whose names are a guarantee not only of honesty and fairness to stockholders, but of good management and business ability. This is a distinctive Minnesota company and the site where it is now digging a well (it owns over a thousand acres in all) is only a few hundred yards in three directions from three of the big oil gushers of the Texas oil fields. There are 14 of these gushers now giving forth their thousands of barrels of oil every day; and so sure are the drillers and oil land owners in Spindle Top Heights that oil will flow, that they absolutely guarantee an oil gusher of large flow, "or no pay."

Under such circumstances shares in this Minnesota company at 25 cents (par value $1) seem like buying gold dollars with quarters. The offer is good enough to justify any man in looking into it fully.

An exchange says that if the farmers would follow these instructions they need not go to any expense to dehorn their cattle. A fourteen year old girl and an old man of Emardville were the principal actors in a drama before county attorney Grady Tuesday. The parties hail from Emardville. 7 to 2.

The rubber between Crookston and Red Lake Falls was played on the home grounds yesterday afternoon. The game was very smooth although our boys showed their superiority from the start. A large audience was present, principally ladies, but it came so easy for the home team that but little rooting was indulged in, and it was one of the quietest games played here.

The score by innings is:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9

This gives Red Lake Falls two out of three games played with Crookston, and leaves our team with a record of only one defeat out of five games this season.

At this stage Ole Christiansen who never likes to see a realestate mix up without taking a hand, secured a syringe and with well directed aim remarked "Let me take a shot at you before you die." The affair proved more serious for Mr. Wood, however, and he is wearing a bandage about his head to-day.

WILL MAINTAIN ITS PRESTIGE.

Duluth Land Office First in Receipts and Acreage.

Duluth, July 3.—The business of the Duluth land office exceeded $200,000 for the fiscal year thus closed. This was $27,000 more than for the preceding year, when Duluth was the first office in the United States in receipts and acreage. That position will be maintained for the year just closed.

This office in order to make such a record handled, examined and passed upon more than 100,000 papers of various kinds. The office force is not large and the amount of work done was far in excess of the average in public offices.

The activity in timber of all kinds, in iron and in farming lands all contributed to the business done, though largely by reflex influence, except in the case of farm lands. Thousands of acres of this land were taken up direct from the government. So great is the acreage and resources of the Duluth land district that the officials in charge expect its importance to be maintained, or to increase, for many years. There are thousands of acres of excellent farming lands in the northern part of the district that will soon be brought into connection with the outside world by railways now building, while in the southern and central portions farms are being opened as roads are built and the home market increases.

THROUGH A CAR WINOOW.

Prisoner on His Way to the Penitentiary Tries to Escape.

Butte, Mon., July 9.—James Rowland, alias Henry Stine, who claims St. Paul as his home, was taken to the penitentiary to serve a term of three years for forgery, to which he had pleaded guilty. On his way to the penitentiary Stine jumped from a car window. The train was stopped and the sheriff and passengers chased the fugitive and recaptured him.

The prison warden has been requested to notify some Minnesota authorities when Stine has completed his term in Montana and he will then be taken to Minnesota and tried. Stine and another man are charged with burglarizing the express office at Stanton, Minn., where they stole Wells-Fargo money orders, which they forged and passed in Butte.

CANAOA TO THE GULF.

Continental Railway Company Incorporated at Oes Moines.

Des Moines, July 4.—Articles of incorporation were filed here during the day for the Continental Railway company, with principal offices in Des Moines. The capital stock is $100,000, with privilege of largely increasing it. The company proposes to build an air line 1,500 miles long from the Lake of the Woods, in British North America, to the Gulf of Mexico, through the states of Iowa, Minnesota, Missouri, Kansas, Indian Territory and Texas, keeping as close to the 95th longitude line as possible. The promoter of the line is William T. Smith of Des Moines. Associated with him are A. E. Harris, J. K. Wilson, Charles W. Thompson, J. T. Brooks and others.

DENIED THE REQUEST.

Great Northern and Northern Pacific Turned Down.

Chicago, July 7.—A proposition to the Western Passenger association by the Northern Pacific and Great Northern roads that their cheap rates to Montana and North Pacific coast points be used by their Eastern connections as a basing rate and that a $45 rate from Chicago to Spokane and Seattle be allowed, has been denied. The proposition will be generally used by the connecting roads individually, however, as several of them announce that they will take independent action in accepting the request of the two Northwestern roads. This will, of course, necessitate similar action on the part of other Eastern connecting lines.

REWARO FOR ROBBERS.

Five Thousand Dollars Offered by the Great Northern.

St. Paul, July 6.—Reports of the express robbery in Montana were received in St. Paul late in the afternoon. It was ascertained at General Superintendent Ward's office that dynamite had been used in the robbery, although no details as to the amount of money secured were given out. The reports were at once communicated to David Allman, chief of the Great Northern secret service, and before 8 o'clock the coast system had posted a reward of $5,000 gold for the apprehension of the robbers. The reward offered is taken as evidence that the booty was heavy.

Result of an Old Trouble.

Farmington, Minn., July 7.—H. J. Smith, a liveryman, was shot in the face by A. J. Keeling, proprietor of the Commercial hotel, and is seriously injured. The men had some trouble last winter and have been enemies ever since. Friday when they met hot words ensued and Keeling drew a revolver and fired at close range. Both men are prominent here and the affair has stirred up a good deal of feeling, each having his partisans.

Poisoned by Lemonade.

Ortonville, Minn., July 9.—By the accidental discharge of a revolver in the hands of his brother, Carl Hazel Schneider, the 10-year-old son of C. W. Schneider, a prominent citizen of this city, met almost instant death. The elder brother, Carl, aged about 15, was cleaning the weapon when the sad accident occurred.

FIELDS LAID WASTE

GRASSHOPPERS OOING MUCH DAMAGE IN CERTAIN SECTIONS OF MINNESOTA.

Rich Bed of Pearls Found in the Mississippi Near Langdon—Two Persons Orowned in the St. Croix a Few Miles From Rush City—Patient in the Fergus Falls Asylum Kills a Fellow Inmate—News of the State in General.

St. Paul, July 7.—The Rocky mountain and White mountain locusts have been doing considerable damage in the Red River valley from Wilkin to Kittson counties. Continued rain and a parasite which attaches itself to the grasshopper have somewhat mitigated the pest, but have not prevented them from cleaning up whole acres of young wheat, flax and potatoes. Whole fields are bare. About Moorhead and Ada the grasshoppers are present in numbers sufficient to do great damage under favorable conditions.

The whole source of the trouble, according to Professor Forbes, acting state entomologist, lies in the common practice of summer fallowing, and Western Minnesota will never be free from grasshoppers until the farmers abandon it. The land left fallow becomes the breeding place of millions of grasshoppers.

MISSISSIPPI PEARL HUNTERS.

Large Clam Bed Is Located Near Langdon, Minn.

Langdon, Minn., July 3.—Pearl hunting on the lower Mississippi has been a great craze for a number of years past, and it has at last reached this place. The largest clam bed ever found on the Mississippi has just been located in the river a few miles above this place by Marion H. Kish of Diamond Bluff, Wis.

The bed is over a mile in length and seven or eight rods wide and several feet deep. Mr. Kish has just begun operations on the bed and has already found a number of valuable pearls, and he contemplates striking something pretty rich before the season is over.

He is a pearl hunter of great repute, having located all the principal beds on the lower Mississippi, working at the business for a number of seasons, and has been the lucky discoverer of many valuable pearls. He expects a large delegation of experienced workers from downriver points the latter part of the week to assist him in his labor.

TWO PERSONS OROWN.

Fatal Accident Occurs Near Rush City, Minn.

Rush City, Minn., July 8.—Mrs. Annie Pust of South St. Paul and Oscar Norris, recently of Independence, Kan., were drowned off the Wisconsin shore in the St. Croix river, about one and a half miles above the railroad bridge of the Grantsburg branch and about six to eight miles from here. It appears the former, with her 3-year-old girl, Oscar Norris, Frank Norris, and John Henry had just gotten into a small boat to cross over to the Minnesota side to take supper at the Norris family homestead, when Mrs. Pust became suddenly frightened and jumped out, causing the boat to tip all on board over. Frank Norris jumped after the child, while Henry tried to rescue the woman, but she clinched him and nearly took him down. He got away and saved Frank Norris and the child and got them to shore safely, about a rod distant. Meanwhile Mrs. Pust and Oscar went down.

Andrew Drechin has completed his barn. It is a large structure. We have many large barns hereabouts.

Richard Melin, Alfred Lindquist, and Miss Gertie Melin accompanied by Miss Clara Johnson of Bray, spent the Fourth in St. Hilaire.

Charley Anderson, the prominent Bray farmer, made a trip to our burg Saturday. He has repaired a new vehicle on which he speeds to town.

Naplin Bros. bought a pair of bronchos in Red Lake Falls for $65. They will have in them a pair of excellent roadsters, weighing about 1,000 pounds.

Miss Anna Sandberg and Victor Sandberg went to Crookston Wednesday to take in the two days' celebration of our great Natal day at that place.

Chas. Hoppe and wife came up from Thief River Falls Friday for the dedication of the German Luth. church, Sunday. They returned home Monday.

A sewing society meeting was held Tuesday afternoon at S. J. Naplin's. The West Siders seems to be more ambitious than the others, as the East sewing union has been hibernating a whole year.

Gust. Peterson, of Crookston, brother-in-law of S. Scholin was up to celebrate the Fourth here, Mrs. Peterson having come up a few days before. They returned home Saturday. Mr Peterson is collector for the Deering Harvester Co.

A Fourth of July picnic was held at S. J. Naplin's under the auspices of the Sw. Luth. congregation. Owing to the rainy weather, the attendance was very small. An enthusiastic debate was an interesting feature of the program.

Mrs. J. P. Larson and family left Wednesday for St. Paul, to join Mr. Larson who went up some weeks since and secured a position in a car shop there. The family has been staying with Chas. Sandberg since their farm was sold, and the bachelor now has to do his own cooking. But that is minor with him, being well versed in the culinary art. He will however notice the vacancy for awhile, when the voices of the young ones no longer sound about his yard.

A GAME OF TENNIS

Two ladies were suitors for my hand. In case this may be misunderstood, although I am sure it would not be with those who know me, I must explain that I was the best tennis player in the house, and both Miss Beatrice and Miss Kitty Trehearne desired me for a partner in a tournament promoted by our hostess.

Just at that time tennis was filling everybody's mind, and there was quite enough jealousy and walking to make the tournament of no small importance. Each gentleman was to ask a lady to play with him, and it was thought probable in some cases that it would lead to a permanent partnership. On the other hand, love in tennis means nothing and is much disliked by the players.

Sitting in the orchard on the afternoon preceding the great event, smoking dreamily in the shade of the trees, I observed Beatrice approaching. She was apparently unaware of my presence until too late to retreat, for she asked forgiveness for disturbing my meditations. I implored her to have pity on my loneliness, and as there were two chairs close together under the big apple tree—not an unusual occurrence—she consented.

"I'm awfully excited about tomorrow," she said after a few inconsequent remarks. "I wonder what the pairs will be."

"I wonder," said I.

She leaned a little toward me.

"I've been practicing my service this morning. I can screw it now."

"A screw is an excellent thing," I replied, carefully abstaining from too much enthusiasm.

"It would go splendidly with your fast service," she remarked thoughtfully.

I pointed to the house.

"They also serve who only stand and wait," I quoted.

"I haven't asked you!" she cried indignantly.

I said nothing. Beatrice rose.

"I won't play with you now," she said.

"Forgive me," I implored. "And may I have the pleasure?"

"No."

"Then I have no chance of winning," I said, flinging myself back in my chair in an attitude of intense despair. Beatrice stood for a moment in silence, steadfastly regarding her parasol. Presently she said:

"You think we should get on well together?"

"I know it," I replied fervently.

"Well, you've been horribly rude, but—perhaps—I do so want to win, and you're the best man in the house."

"Such an opinion from you!" I cried joyfully.

"At tennis," added Beatrice.

My joy moderated.

"You say too many horrid things for any one to like you, you know," she said. I jumped up. She walked quickly away. But she looked back once and smiled at me.

I seated myself again under the apple tree and began to think of possibilities.

"Tea."

The voice came from behind me. I knew it well. In a moment my thoughts were ... [illegible] and I jumped up. Kitty was standing at the back of my chair, holding in one hand a cup of tea and in the other a plate on which lay a square inch of cake.

"This is an honor," said I, astounded.

"One large lump and one small and not too much milk," said she, holding the cup out to me. "I think that is right."

I took the proffered refreshment, and Kitty sank into a chair, remarking:

"I must wait for the cup."

"But really," I began, resuming my seat.

"It is a pleasure," she said. "I've just come from the tennis ground and thought you might like it."

She paused for a moment, then added:

"I've been practicing my service."

I began to understand. I said, "Oh!"

"I can place it anywhere now; a nice, fast service. I think that's much better than a screw, don't you?"

She looked up at me. Big hats become her remarkably well.

"Infinitely better," said I.

"Do you think that—that—we should make a good pair?" she asked after a moment's silence.

How could I resist? There were the tea, and the cake, and the big hat, and I am mortal. Kitty graciously consented to play with me in the tournament.

But when she left me I began to realize that I was compelled to choose between the two young ladies, with the certainty of offending one.

I had struck a match to light a fresh cigar and was gazing thoughtfully at the flame, when an idea came to me. I threw down the match and took out my penknife. Then I drew the sharp edge across my thumb, afterward making an imposing bandage with my handkerchief. I was disabled.

As I remarked at dinner that evening, it was a most unfortunate occurrence, but I hoped with care and nourishment soon to regain my former vigor. I could not, of course, play in the tournament, but would gladly pour out the tea and make myself generally useful.

To have offended either Beatrice or Kitty Trehearne would have made me most unhappy.

For I am very fond of both my sisters.—King.

We have 19 tracts aggregating over 1000 acres, scattered through the best portions of the oil districts of Jefferson and Hardin Counties, Texas, two of which are near the great gushers which have made Beaumont famous.

Having determined to obtain a gusher if possible, we are now boring a well on land just purchased on Spindle Top Hill, only 600 feet southeast of the famous "Beatty Gusher," which sold for $1,250,000, and 600 feet northeast of the Hogg-Swayne gusher which has just come in; practically between the two. This land cost a large sum and is considered sure gusher land. No gusher has yet been obtained in Texas except on this hill and no well driven on it has failed to be a gusher, producing in the neighborhood of 70,000 barrels a day. This purchase reduces the speculative element in this venture to the minimum; practically eliminates it.

For development purposes we are now offering a limited amount of treasury stock at 25 cents a share; par value $1.00. The price will soon be advanced.

We feel safe in recommending the purchase of this stock, believing we will obtain at least enough oil to pay good dividends on its cost, and expect to and believe we will obtain a gusher within 90 days, which will at once make it worth many times what it cost you.

TO PREVENT FLOODS.

SOME PLAIN FACTS BEARING ON RED RIVER VALLEY FLOODS.

SOURCE OF THE RED RIVER OF THE NORTH AND TRIBUTARIES.

The Red River of the North, so named to distinguish it from the Red River of Louisiana, has its source in a small lake about 1550 feet above the sea, thirteen miles west of Lake Itasca. It flows south passing through Elbow, Many Point, Round, Height of Land, Little Pine and Rush Lakes to Otter Tail Lake, this portion being commonly called Otter Tail River. Below Otter Tail Lake this stream is called Red River by Monograph 25 U. S. Geological Survey, but it is occasionally Otter Tail River to its junction with the Bois de Sioux River at Breckenridge and Wahpeton. Between Otter Tail Lake and Breckenridge and Wahpeton its descent is 372 feet. It is most rapid in the vicinity of Fergus Falls, amounting to eighty feet in three miles. Because of the numerous lakes on the upper portion of the stream its volume is not greatly affected by either heavy rains or snows or dry seasons. From Breckenridge to Lake Winnipeg its descent is 230 feet.

The range between the highest and lowest stages of the Red River of the North increases rapidly north of Breckenridge, being thirty feet six-tenths at Moorhead and Fargo, forty-three feet and five-tenths at Grand Forks, thirty eight feet and six inches at Pembina, in the year 1881. In the year 1893 it reached forty-three feet and a half at Grand Forks and in 1897, during the last great flood, at Grand Fork the river reached forty-six feet and eight-tenths. At Lower Fort Gary, sixteen miles from Winnipeg, it rises to thirty-five feet.

Floods have occurred during which the water has risen to nearly the high water line in 1826, 1852, 1860, 1861, 1862, 1893 and 1897. They are caused in the spring by the melting of unusual supplies of snow and by accompanying heavy rains, and often are increased by gorges of ice which is usually broken up along the southern portion of the river earlier than that along its lower course. They overflow the banks and flat land on each side of the river to a distance of many miles.

In considering the cause and the prevention of the floods in the Red River Valley it is well to look first, at the ancient physical geography of the country; second, the modern physical geography; third, the climatic condition; fourth, the principal water source; and fifth, the means and preventions of floods.

Anciently the Red River Valley was a great lake, this inland sea covering some 700 miles in length, and approximately 300 miles in width; its greatest depth exceeded 360 feet. The water that was supplied to this lake came from all the country surrounding it for many miles. Lake Winnipeg is all that remains of the lake whose southern extremity reached to the present northern end of Lake Traverse. The outlet of this lake was the present Minnesota River Valley.

Of all the modern geography little need be said on account of all being acquainted with the fact that at the present time all of the water of the Red River Valley empties into Lake Winnipeg and through Nelson River into Hudson Bay.

Of the climatic conditions it is necessary for us to note that the southern extremity of the Red River, which is in latitude 45 and is much warmer than in the region of the Nelson River, which lies in latitude 55. Attention is also called to the fact that ice, in the streams in the southern portion, and that the spring floods of the river north create ice-jams in the northern portion, causing the water to spread out over the surrounding country, thus creating the floods so disastrous to the residents of this valley.

In taking up the subject of the water courses, the most southerly source of the Red River, is Lake Traverse and the Bois de Sioux River; second, the Otter Tail River and its sources; third, the Red Lake River and the Red Lake. These three are the principal feeders of the Red River, and the chief cause of the floods.

We find by referring to the surveys of the U. S. Engineering corps that If the waters of these three regions could be controlled, the floods of the Red River Valley will practically be prevented. Taking into consideration the Lake Traverse region by itself, the elevations should first be considered. While Big Stone Lake is not at the present time, directly connected with Lake Traverse, the land between the two lakes, viz: Brown's Valley, is only about two (2) feet higher than the ordinary stages of water in Lake Traverse. Big Stone Lake, however, is about eight (8) feet lower than Lake Traverse, 962 feet above the level of the ocean. Lake Traverse 970 feet above the level of the ocean.

The elevation of the level plain at Wahpeton, N. D., is 960 feet above the ocean, two (2) feet lower than the water in Big Stone Lake; but seventeen miles east of Wahpeton the level plain is 1080 feet above the ocean, or exactly 110 feet above Lake Traverse and 118 feet above Big Stone Lake. Nearly all the water of that region flows through the Otter Tail River and is supplied to that river from the land for more than seventeen miles east of the Red River, so that during flood periods all the water of the Otter Tail River, and the waters of the basin of Lake Traverse might be discharged into Lake Traverse, and from thence allowed to flow into Big Stone Lake, and down the Minnesota River to the Mississippi; by this system dangers of floods prevented from these two sources.

Col. R. Davenport, in his excellent paper, read before the meeting of the Tri State Drainage Association at Crookston, showed that the supply of water at the Otter Tail Lake would be much greater than could be stored in the Otter Tail Lake, except by raising it ten feet above ordinary stages. It would therefore be desirable that another storage basin be had in order to prevent the floods in the valley from this source.

These are the first two of the principal sources of the Red River, the third, viz: Red Lake River and Red Lake are to be considered by themselves.

Accordingly to the report as given by Colonel Davenport, the Red Lake itself as a reservoir would probably hold more water than could reach the lake from its own basin, therefore, if Red Lake were made into a storage basin, the three chief sources of the floods of the Red River would also be prevented.

Much of interest will be developed at the Tri-State Drainage meeting in Fargo, July 16-18, where large delegation are present from both Dakotas and Minnesota.

Roseau County Records Stolen.

Roseau, July 15.—The office of the register of deeds was burglarized at an early hour this morning and nine books of record stolen. One was afterwards recovered, being found on the road west of town. There is no clue to the identity of the guilty parties, but the officers are actively at work on the case. The means of gaining entrance to the office employed by the burglars leads the authorities to believe that the burglars were experienced in the work, although it is not understood what use cracksmen could have for their records. They secured nothing else. It may transpire when the matter is shifted to the bottom that the burglars were men interested in local affairs, even if they are apparently interested in entering offices.

KEEP YOUR BLOOD CLEAN

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure Catarrh by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of Catarrh, has at last perfected a treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures Catarrh, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "Snuffles the guaranteed Catarrh Cure" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

WOMAN'S WORLD.

AN ATLANTA NURSE TO SUPERINTEND IN A PARIS HOSPITAL.

The Girls of East India—The Girl With the Suit Case—She Was Decorated For Bravery—Pays to Sell Switches—Her Fortune In Dolls.

Miss Marie Louise Meier, who has been for some time one of the nurses at the Grady hospital and who is highly regarded by Atlanta physicians for her ability, has been appointed superintendent of nurses in the Hospital Lanneau du Chantel in Paris. She will leave Atlanta to assume the duties of her new position in the famous French sanitarium in December.

Miss Meier will be accompanied by Mrs. H. Jones, another trained nurse favorably known to Atlanta physicians. Mrs. Jones is at present employed at Stockard's sanitarium, on Walton street. She will go to Paris as a pupil nurse under Miss Meier. She feels that she can better fit herself for the duties of a nurse abroad than in this country.

MISS MARIE LOUISE MEIER.

The appointment to the position of head nurse in the big Paris sanitarium is a decided compliment to Miss Meier's ability. The Lanneau du Chantel is one of the largest and best known institutions of its kind in France. On the hospital staff are famous surgeons and physicians. Many hundreds of patients are treated annually.

Miss Meier is a graduate nurse of the Jewish hospital in Cincinnati. Since last November she has been head nurse of the white charity wards at the Grady hospital. She resigned her position on May 1 and is taking a well earned rest preparatory to assuming her arduous duties in the French sanitarium.—Atlanta Constitution.

The Girls of East India.

The children of India are clothed with brass jewelry rather than with garments of cloth. They run wild, with little or no attention. At the age of 11 a Hindoo girl becomes a woman and then her liberty ceases. They can neither read, write nor sew, being taught only to cook a little, and they spend their time blacking their eyebrows, dyeing their finger nails red and decorating themselves with jewelry. In India the wealth of a man is gauged by the amount of jewelry he lavishes upon the women of his family.

When a girl is born, the first question asked is whom shall she marry. Every high caste girl must be wedded at 12, and to a man of her caste and her horoscope. He may be comparatively young, middle aged or old, immoral, diseased or brutal; it makes no difference if his caste and horoscope agree with hers. A woman in India is perfectly helpless.

She is generally married at 8 or 9, but does not become a member of her husband's family until she is 12. If it should chance that her husband die before that time, she becomes a child widow, the most despised of creatures. A curse is believed to be upon her, and if she goes the ordinary course she commits suicide in desperation. There are 72,000 child widows under 9 years of age in India.

There is no wooing or being won in India. Every girl over 12 is a wife or widow. There the mother-in-law reigns supreme. She rules with a high hand and a rod of iron.

The Hindoo who dies without a son believes he loses eternal life, and frequently mothers give their daughters to be nautch girls in the temples—the vilest life in the world—in the belief that they may appease the anger of the gods and have sons born to them.

American dolls, given as prizes in the Christian schools, and American fine tooth combs, the importance of which you must visit India to realize, are doing more to Christianize India than anything else.—Review of Reviews.

The Girl With the Suit Case.

The young woman with the suit case has lately received criticism in the newspapers as a good bit of a nuisance. It is said of her, that she has no idea how to carry her burden to keep it out of the way and that she swings through town, along the street and in elevated and surface cars, impeding progress, banging other folks' anatomy and making herself rather generally disliked.

The further charge is made against her that her trail of discomfort is largely unnecessary, that she does not need the big case to carry the satchelful of belongings which are alleged to rattle around in it.

It is certainly true that the coat case young woman is very much in evidence, but it has not been suspected heretofore that she was other than her own enemy, for the occasional times when her case holds a bagatelle of belongings there are many more when it is packed to bursting and is a much too heavy burden to be undertaken by her.

Yet what, ask the girls—college girls and others—who appreciate the convenience of this luggage carrier, are we to do about it? In point of fact, the suit case to women is the same convenience that it is to men. It is a necessity of the present methods of transportation in a big city like New York.

A girl comes down from college for a dinner or a dance. Into this convenient box with handles goes her gown for the evening, and it is carried by her directly to the place where she will dress. To trust it to an expressman from a Jersey City train to an up town residence or from the Forty-second street station to Harlem or Brooklyn is risky for quick delivery. She knows, for she has tried it.

The girl going from town for a night in the suburbs takes equally in her hands the possibility of not seeing her frock till the next day unless she has been very forehanded in the sending off of the case. Until cheap cabs for long distances and pneumatic tubes for shunting luggage across the city in a few minutes are a fact the public will have to accept the suit case girl as the girl, alas, has now to accept and carry the case.—New York World.

She Was Decorated For Bravery.

For the first time in the history of the State university of Iowa a medal for bravery has been awarded to one of its young women students. The girl so decorated is Miss Carolyn Jarvis of Burlington, one of the most popular girls in the university.

Miss Jarvis' hobby is athletics. She is the champion basket ball and tennis player on the women's side of the university, a daily attendant in the gymnasium, an oarswoman and a fine swimmer. If she hadn't been strong and able to swim so well, one young man who was present when she received her medal a few days ago wouldn't have been there. In fact, there would have been no medal.

The girl's decoration for bravery was won on, or rather in, the river. A short time ago a number of the young women students at the university gave a canoeing party near Coralville. A squall came up just as the fun was at its height and capsized one of the canoes. In it were Miss Jarvis and R. M. Fagan, a student.

The man couldn't swim, and the rest of the party were too far away to help. He clung to the capsized boat and looked to his girl companion for aid. Her dress was caught on the rail of the canoe, and she couldn't free it, but that didn't frighten her.

The nearest shore was 150 feet away, and Miss Jarvis struck out for it, towing the capsized canoe and the helpless man clinging to it. She had a hard struggle, but her muscles, hardened in the gymnasium, stood the strain. Girl, canoe and man reached the shore safely, and then the man helped his rescuer, who was almost exhausted, out of the water.

When she received a medal as a reward for her pluck, the man she saved applauded her more heartily than anybody else, which was natural.

Pays to Sell Switches.

Dentists and hairdressers are having a busy season just now, after which they will experience a marked depression in trade. It has become a custom for people going out of town for the summer to have their teeth attended to before starting for the vacation, children especially being brought for the annual examination of their teeth.

Hairdressers are rushed with orders for new pompadours and switches and curls that are used so largely during the warm days, when hair refuses to stay in curl. False hair has gone out of fashion, it is true, but many women still cling to the switch, which adds to the abundance, but not to the beauty of their coiffures.

One reason for this is that a hairdresser never loses an opportunity to talk her customer into having a switch if there is any possible ground for it. Switches pay a hairdresser a large profit, as they are quickly made, and there is none of the fine work necessary which has to be put into wigs or the pompadour effects that have been so fashionable.

The curl extending from the low coiffure from the neck was brought into fashion again by Mary Mannering in "Janice Meredith," and Miss Barrymore has accepted it with her bunch of removable curls in "Captain Jinks." They are seen occasionally with evening dress and are only suitable for wear with a low gown which allows them to rest upon the neck.

False hair will never go entirely out of fashion while the hairdressers can prevent it, for it is their best source of revenue. Since the bang went out of style their profits suffered an enormous decrease, as the cutting and curling of those disfiguring fringes yielded them great gain.—New York Sun.

Her Fortune In Dolls.

Miss Nellie Morrison of Salina, Kan., is making a fortune by making dolls from cornhusks. Her trade extends all over the United States and Europe.

When a child, she made these dolls for her little friends. The demand was so great that she sold them for 25 cents each. Now she is 28 years old and sells the dolls by the hundred at the same price.

The first corn carnival held in Atchison in 1895 brought Miss Morrison prominently before the public. Her dolls exhibited there leaped at once into popular favor, and she received more orders than she could possibly fill. She has never been able to find an assistant who could put the cornhusks together as skillfully as she herself does the work.

She is kept busy day and night supplying the demand. She has sent the queer dolls to Germany and France and recently shipped a large lot to England. She says she does not know exactly how many dolls she has made, but the number would run into the thousands.

Miss Morrison uses about as many husks as are found on an ordinary ear of corn to make each doll. The cob serves as the body. The face is covered with a husk, and the features are painted on. Corn silk is used for the hair. The dress is a full skirt of husks, with a shirt waist and an Eton jacket. A cornhusk sash encircles the waist. The hat is a big scoop bonnet trimmed with tassels. In her right hand the doll holds a dainty parasol made of firm straw, with a particularly silky husk for a cover.

Mrs. Craig's Important Position.

Mrs. R. L. Craig of Los Angeles has been made the chairman of the local board of directors to formulate plans for the sixth biennial meeting of the General federation to be held in Los Angeles next April. This is one of the most important offices in any of the preparatory committees, and the fact that Mrs. Craig's selection gives general satisfaction wherever she is well known indicates that a fortunate choice has been made. Mrs. Craig is a leading member of the Friday Morning club of Los Angeles and was the first president of the Civic league of the same place. Preliminary meetings of the board have already been held, at one of which the sentiment uttered by one of the board members that "Los Angeles is not the place to begin to economize in bestowing lavish entertainment upon the distinguished visitors" was enthusiastically indorsed. Clubwomen throughout the entire state of California are eagerly anticipating the visit of their club sisters and will undoubtedly give them a unique and memorable reception.

Collectors, Take Notice.

There should be solemn warning to the spoon collector in the statement of the Smith college girl who was recently arrested for stealing. "My first step was a fascinating experience," she is said to have declared, and by that first she fell. So may it not be with others who now are satisfied with pocketing table appointments from restaurants? They always say, these freaks, that they do it because it is such fun. But, following the present case, where may that fun not end? When they are looking at jewelry in a shop, it would get so exciting to see if they could pocket a diamond ring with no one being the wiser. It would be such sport to afterward flash the ring, the giver of which should remain a mysterious unknown.

It isn't a safe game at any time, and it isn't nice. That hasn't prevented the fair sex from indulging in it, but after this it is time that stopped.—New York Telegram.

Shall Women Smoke?

They have been discussing that old question of whether or not women shall smoke over in England, with the usual results. There are both pros and cons given—more of the latter than the former. From Girton college comes the strongest con. Girton says that it is smoking which makes fashionable women silly and inane, that it arrests physical and mental development and fills the prisons and reformatories, for "it is very detrimental to the moral tone of females." A doctor says that smoking injures women no more than men, and another man declares that the English are already becoming a race of pygmies because of the smoking habit among men, and if women go in for it the physique of the people is doomed. No one, however, says anything new, as there is nothing new to say.

French Girls and Physical Training.

"Physical education is becoming more and more popular," writes Th. Bentzon (Mme. Blanc), editor of Le Revue des Deux Mondes, of "A Girl's Life In France" in The Ladies' Home Journal. "Formerly nothing was taught but dancing and swimming. Riding was reserved for wealthy girls in Paris, although in the country it was more generally practiced. Now all gymnastic and calisthenic exercises are in favor, and a great many young ladies play tennis, skate or ride bicycles, as they do in England."

Just One Man Dressmaker.

According to one of the officers' wives who has returned for a home visit from Manila, there are now 200 American women in Manila for whom there is only one dressmaker. He is a Chinese. Recently he was arrested for smuggling, whereupon the 200 women began to intercede. If Sang were put in jail, wherewithal could they be clothed? Fortunately Sang proved himself not guilty.

The greater number of belts are shaped, and white calf and patent leather are among the best. The harness buckle is the buckle for these belts. Occasionally there is a buckle that is covered. Some of the belts have buckles on either side of the front and open at one of them. Suede and velvet belts are studded with metal.

Miss Belle Hyman of Chicago has been appointed a trustee of the Illinois Industrial Home For the Blind by Governor Yates. She has been blind since the age of 4 years, but is an accomplished musician and linguist. She is well known for her enthusiastic efforts to benefit the poor and sightless.

Brooches especially designed to fasten the belt or the blouse in front are one of the latest novelties. The prevailing style is a turquoise set in dull gold, and the size seems to depend on the capacity of the purse.

Rev. Clara E. Morgan, pastor of the Universalist church at Nunda, N. Y., delivered the address at the Memorial day exercises held in her town.

FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

The China Closet.

Perhaps the most important part of a dining room is the china closet. On the arrangement of the dishes within it depends a great deal of the artistic effect that should give charm to the room.

The inner woodwork, excepting the shelves, should be tinted to match the wood finish of the dining room and varnished. For covering the shelves butcher's linen is perhaps the best fabric and should extend not more than a half inch below the edge of the shelf. A line of drawn work or narrow scallops in buttonhole stitch may finish the edge. A soft pad should be put under the linen cover to lessen the danger of breaking from a slip or jar.

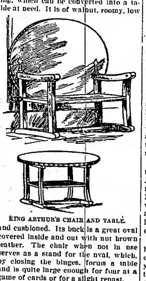
When the shelves are sufficiently far apart, it is well to put screw hooks into the underside on which to hang cups, punch glasses and small cream pitchers. These should be placed with due regard to harmony of color and form. The saucers may be hung at the back in wire china racks or may stand in piles in the corners, says the New York Tribune.

Heavy pieces of cut glass, such as punch bowls and salad bowls, should be put on the lowest shelf for security. Lighter pieces may go on the top shelf. No matter how crowded the closet may be nothing should ever be placed inside a piece of cut glass. If necessary to economize space, the better way is to put the small article first on the shelf and invert the larger over it. The upper piece must rest absolutely on its own margin without pressure on any part of the lower dish. An occasional bit of colored glass gives a pretty variety to the arrangement.

In placing large platters narrow strips of wood should be tacked on the shelves unless they have the proper safety grooves to keep them from slipping.

Country Home Comforts.

Among the novelties for country homes is one of pronounced style called the King Arthur chair. It is an artistic and decorative hall or piazza furnishing, which can be converted into a table at need. It is of walnut, roomy, low and cushioned. Its back is a great oval covered inside and out with nut brown leather. The chair when not in use serves as a stand for the oval, which, by closing the hinges, forms a table and is quite large enough for four at a game of cards or for a slight repast.



KING ARTHUR'S CHAIR AND TABLE.

Hamburger Steak.

Hamburger steak is a wholesome meat dish that is quite unknown to many homes where its cheapness ought to appeal. A supply for six persons can be obtained for about 15 cents. It can be purchased in the necessary chopped condition or bought in bulk and minced at home. It is the cheap portion of meat which contains as much nutriment as the choicer parts and more than some of them. One pound chopped and seasoned with salt, pepper and a few drops of onion juice and a little finely chopped parsley is enough for the family. It should be shaped in small, flat cakes, not too compact, and cooked on a greased broiler or in an omelet pan. They may be spread with butter or served with maitre d'hotel sauce made by rubbing half a cupful of butter in a bowl until it creams, then adding a teaspoonful of salt, half a teaspoonful of pepper, two tablespoonfuls of chopped parsley and the juice of a lemon. When thoroughly mixed, add a custard made by boiling sufficient white stock and then stirring in two well beaten eggs. The entire mixture should boil for three minutes, stirring all the time. The quantities can be reduced, of course.—Betty Bradeen in Boston Traveler.

Soil For the Plants.

Depth of soil is the first essential to success in growing roses, says an authority. The roots should have room enough to absorb the required food and moisture. Soil that contains considerable clay is best, but it should be well loosened. Good drainage is sometimes obtained by removing the soil to a depth of three feet, filling about half the space with stones, broken crockery or brick, and then replacing the soil. The drainage materials are too far below the roots to draw off moisture needed by the plant, while they allow ample drainage for surplus water.

Holland Taffeta For Curtains.

A charming material for curtains is plain holland colored taffeta. It is especially pretty for bedrooms, and one recently furnished had the walls hung with rose and trellis paper. Each curtain was lined with pink and trimmed by a band of heavy ecru lace laid over a band of pink. The same idea might be carried out in a drawing room, hanging the walls with a green silk effect brocade paper and lining the curtains and the insertion with green.

Its approaches have been swept away and the Shelly bridge has suffered the same fate.

The grand jury at Olivia brought in three indictments against Martin Johnson Hage and his wife, Johannes, for conspiracy against the mother of Mrs. Hage to murder her by slow starvation. The other two indictments are along the same line. The couple live near Fairfax, on a section of land of their own.

Mrs. Margaret E. Catlin of Danville has been adjudged insane and ordered committed to the St. Peter asylum. A year ago she was sent to the Rochester asylum, but was subsequently discharged. The state railroad commission has engaged W. D. The task it is thought will occupy a couple of months.

Cattle in Minnesota are becoming afflicted with hemorrhagic septicemia, or blood poisoning accompanied with hemorrhage. The state board of health has made the discovery. The cause of the disease is the bacillus bovisepticus, which is contagious and affects men as well as beasts. Eight outbreaks in as many different places were found during the past year.

William Bausen, a farmer residing near Little Falls, was killed by a runaway team southeast of that city. He was driving a team and was followed by another driven by his two small sons. The second team started to run away, and as it turned from the road to pass the first wagon the father jumped to the ground to stop it. The wagon pole struck him on the forehead, killing him instantly.

KNOWS NOT WHAT HE LOSES

The ideas of a successful merchant are the ones that most interest merchants. Geo. B. Forrest, of Indianapolis, is one of the men who have been eminently successful in mercantile pursuits, and the following are a few of his ideas:

Sometimes a merchant gets it into his head, or has it in his head, that as long as things seemingly "come his way" he can rest contented and need not advertise nor even worry his brains about telling the people what he has for them to buy. "Everybody knows me, knows that I keep store and that I can sell them when they want to buy," the merchants reason. "You can't make 'em buy only what they want, and when they want a thing they'll come for it." and so it goes.

The merchant who thinks that way is all wrong. I know he is wrong, because I have facts and failures and mercantile history by the ton to prove he is wrong.

Just such thinking as this is what keeps goods on the shelf.

Just such thinking as this is what makes some places of business appear like the chapels of grave-yards.

Just such thinking as this is what runs up the number of failures.

Just such thinking as this is what makes good openings for competitors.

Just such thinking as this is what makes people flock to wide-awake marts to purchase their wares.

Just such thinking as this is what has built up the big mail order houses.

And I could keep on with my "justs" indefinitely.

How a merchant in this day and age, can believe that it does no good to advertise is a wonder to many.

Even with a section all to one's self, to neglect to advertise is to lose many sales.

When merchants once get the fact thoroughly planted in their minds that the purpose of advertising is not only to tell people where to buy that which they already want, but to create a desire for things which can be bought, then we may look for a change in the management of many a business.

Right down next to W. F. Street's door, the Beltrami County Advocate, a staunch Populist paper, comes out strong for Halvor Steenerson for congress. The Advocate fails to state whether its preferences were for Steenerson's nomination on the Republican or Populist ticket, but says among other things:

Among the multitude of republicans "possibilities"—a multitude too large to enumerate, as every county, and almost every village has its "favorite son" they wish honored—there stands a man who looms up far above his competitors, like a giant among pigmies, a man possessed of brains, integrity and determination—the equalities of true statesmanship;—one who has, by his eminent ability, gained a high standing and enviable reputation as an attorney: a man who is too great and too honorable to become a party heeler or a political tool. We refer to the Hon. Halvor Steenerson, of Crookston. If he is nominated Polk county can well afford to feel proud of the candidate it has furnished to the district, and if he should be elected the Ninth district would have no occasion to feel ashamed of her representative in the halls of congress.

The Burlington Route operates nearly 8,000 miles of road, and reaches every important city between the Great Lakes and the Rocky Mountains. For fast service and general excellence of equipment this line has a world-wide reputation, and, in particular, its dining cars, operated on the European plan, are of the very highest character.

Facts and Fancies.

At Olivia a horrible case of depravity has come to light. Johnson Hage, a wealthy farmer, and his wife are accused of locking up the aged and insane mother in a shed, without a bed or care and nearly starving her.

Prof. W. Hall of Grand Forks, is going to build a fine summer home for himself at Maple Lake. The main feature of his building will be a covered and enclosed porch, 56 feet long and 20 feet wide, and will make a beautiful place for dances and parties during the summer.

An Iowa business man took a vacation and came to the lakes of Northern Minnesota on a fishing trip. Never having caught anything but bull-heads, he was so elated with his catch of a seven-pound bass that he telegraphed his wife: "I've got one: weighs seven pounds and is a beauty." In reply came the following signed by the fisherman's wife. "So have I: weighs ten pounds. He isn't a beauty: looks like you."

The great need of opening up Lost River has caused a number of farmers on its course to subscribe liberally to a general fund to be used for this purpose. A few hundred dollars from the state would do much to help them and they hope to secure at least a slight assistance from this source at this time. There is no section of the county where $1,000 expended in drainage work would go further than in this opening of Lost River.

Horace Bagley, of the firm of Bagley & Mabey, has purchased the Thief River Falls Press from W. C. Smiley, who was in the harness just a year. Mr. Bagley although not a printer has had considerable experience in the newspaper business, having been associated for a time with H. C. Hotaling in the publication of that excellent sheet, the Mapleton Enterprise. We doubt not he will make of the Press a good paper. The Gazette extends to Editor Bagley a cordial welcome to the field of journalism in Red Lake county.

Happiness is not to be procured like hardbake in a solid lump; it is composed of innumerable small items. The recipes for its acquisition are simple: Love in marriage, fidelity in friendship, affection between parents and children, courtesy in intercourse, devotion to duty and perfect sincerity in every relation of life. In the quest for happiness one could not do better than put into practice the precepts of the great Persian: "Taking the first step with the good thought, the second step with the good word and the third step with the good deed, I entered paradise."

One half off on all white goods and one quarter off on all wash goods until further notice. Here is a $6,000 stock of dry goods going at a remarkable sacrifice. Are you a wise buyer? If so, you will at least come in and look over the goods so as to be able to judge for yourself.

7 TO 5

THIS TELLS THE STORY OF THE SLAUGHTER LAST SATURDAY.

THE SELECTS PULL OUT THEIR FIFTH VICTORY IN SIX GAMES.

The Selects won another game of ball from the Crookston Infallibles, Saturday, the score being 7 to 5. In the first Healy led off with a single hit and took the bags around to third before Wall touched up the Spalding for a real pretty hit. O'Neil went out on a foul to the catcher. After these three, Bradish was hit hard, Hunt making a clean two bagger, on the strength of which two scores were added to the list. Coenen struck out, and Healy was out on an infield hit to third. Six good scores were brought in by the Selects in this half, only one of which was earned, the others being made on errors. The Crookston boys managed by good luck and fast running on Erickson's part, to bring in one score. From this point neither side scored again until the sixth inning, most of the time going out in the one, two, three order, and seemingly having a battle between the batteries, both of which are deserving of great credit. In the sixth Rolnisch started off with a hit and succeeded in scoring and Twedten followed his example in the seventh. The Selects seemed to have lost sight of home-plate up to this time, but at this critical period three hits are recorded and Thoele crossed the line making the last score for the Selects. In the last inning the Selects again failed to score, while Crookston came in strong (for them) and made two scores, thus making the score 7 to 5 in favor of the Selects. The pitching of both Bradish and Thoele is well worth mentioning. Bradish striking out twelve and Thoele, fifteen. All did good work in fact, and it would have been the envy of many stronger teams to have played as errorless a game as did the Selects. The following is the correct score in all its details.

WANT A NEW DEPOT.

THE WYLIE PEOPLE WILL KICK TILL THEY GET IT.

Persistent kicking is a virtue when directed against an evil, and the protests going up from Wylie over the excuse of a depot landed there last fall by the Great Northern upon order of the railroad and warehouse commission are even more emphatic than the kicks heard when they had no station at all. The admirable persistency of our Wylie friends has at least excited the attention of the commission, and yesterday they visited Wylie to inspect the conditions there. Fortunately it was a hot day and as only one big gun at a time can get into the Wylie depot they had to take turns in seeking refuge from the sweltering heat. It is more than likely now that Wylie will get a depot.

Drowned at St. Hilaire.

Coroner Belair received a telephone message Saturday morning informing him that a young man had been drowned at St. Hilaire the evening before. He immediately drove up arriving there shortly after noon, and held an examination. It developed that Sigval Gjerde, aged 23 years, had been drowned at 7:30 Friday evening above the dam while bathing. Gjerde was employed as sweeper at the saw-mill, and together with a companion, decided to go in bathing as a relief from the terrible heat of the day. They went in at a point where the water is shallow, not 5 feet deep, but without a knowledge that some 20 feet out there is an abrupt declivity and the water here is some twelve or fifteen feet deep. Gjerde walked off at this point, and not being able to swim went down uttering a piercing shriek and holding his arms straight up over his head. His companion immediately went to his assistance, but the body did not come up again, and was found a couple of hours later in close proximity to where he had been last seen.

His parents reside eight miles east of Angus, and a brother was on hand the following day and made all arrangements for having the body shipped.

Coroner Belair returned to the city in the evening.

The location is a thousand miles west of Winnipeg, and 160 miles north of Calgary, and is a fifteen mile drive from a railroad. Mr. Rollag describes the country as a national park of poplar groves and open land, where one can plow from 50 to 100 acres without grubbing.

The following shows how envy can blind even the bright judgment of a Durand—who says in Saturday's Journal: Crookston is playing ball against the Red Lake Falls team at the fair grounds this afternoon. The team from the young county seat up river took a heavy fall out of the boys when they went into the enemy's country the first of the week, and the local men went out today with a determination to even up the old score. The line up of the Crookston team shows that in to-day's game the strongest team which has represented this city during the season is on the field, and the Red Lakers' defeat is a fore gone conclusion.

Messrs. Mills, Miller and Staples, Minnesota board of railroad and warehouse commissioners, visited Red Lake Falls yesterday to see about that daily exclusively passenger train. They plainly stated that it was out of the question, in their opinion, unless future representations should change their view of the case.

The editor may publish column after column in laudation of a man or firm, and they think it is a duty he owes to the public to commend them; but let him print one line that can be construed as a reflection, and they are upon their high toes in a minute, and all the good things the editor has said about them count for nothing. And yet we are told that the majority of the people like to have a paper fearless, independent and outspoken.

CAUSED BY BUGS

STREET CAR COLLISIONS AT ST. PAUL IN WHICH A NUMBER ARE INJURED.

Younger Brothers Formally Released From Penitentiary—New York Man Pays $50,000 for Minnesota Pearls. Excitement Over the Discovery of Gold Near Beaver Falls—State News in General.

St. Paul, July 16.—There were two street car collisions on University avenue, this city, late Sunday night, as the result of the accumulation of millions of electric light bugs on the rails between Summit avenue and Ninth street.

A dozen or more persons were injured. In the first accident two special cars from Lake Como collided, and Miss B. Bernstein, 153 Wabasha street, was quite seriously injured. A few moments later a Rice street car was suddenly impeded by the slippery rails, and a Como car, going at good speed, ran into it.

Both cars were crowded and a panic resulted. The front end of the Rice street car was demolished. Several persons were injured while trying to escape from the cars. Mrs. J. F. Wilcox, residing at 418 East Seventh street, was badly injured and may not recover. Her husband and two small children were also seriously hurt.

OUTSIDE THE WALLS.

Younger Brothers Begin to Enjoy Their Parole.

Stillwater, Minn., July 16.—The Younger brothers have been released from the rules and regulations of the state's prison. During the day they took a trip down town, accompanied by a few friends. Both men expressed their gratitude at once more regaining their freedom. On their return to the prison Warden Wolfer informed them that a place of employment had not yet been selected for them, and while they remained at the prison they would occupy a room in the officers' quarters and dine in the officers' diningroom. He added that they were free to come and go whenever they chose, and added that for a couple of days they would be permitted to enjoy themselves and get acquainted with conditions on the outside.

BUYING MANY PEARLS.

New York Man Gets $50,000 Worth of Northwest Gems.

Winona, Minn., July 12.—Maurice Brower of New York, an extensive buyer of pearls, was in Winona yesterday on his way down river and nearing the end of an extended pearl purchasing trip. In about 10 days he will leave for New York with the purchases he has made. He stated that the trip had been very successful and that by the time it was ended he would have expended close to $50,000 for pearls and slugs. He secured several pearls in this city, and reports leaving close to $1,800 here. The largest price paid here for any one pearl was $350 to C. W. Davis, who for some time past has been hunting for clams on Crooked slough. This particular pearl Mr. Davis bought at Stoddard, Wis., a month ago, for $100. It is a perfectly formed pearl of rather silvery color, a good quarter of an inch in diameter.

GOLD EXCITEMENT.

Pure Specimens Found Near Beaver Falls, Minn.

Olivia, Minn., July 16.—Beaver Falls, a small village 16 miles south of here, is greatly excited over the discovery of gold in Beaver creek. Three men, by the names of Amos King, John Devoe and Henry Reichert, while traveling along the road from Beaver Falls, sought the bank of the creek to obtain a drink. As they approached the water they saw glittering particles in the bed of the creek and to satisfy their curiosity they took a fine tooth comb and gathered up the sparkling specimens. They took it to North Redwood where it was pronounced to be gold.

Others immediately visited the spot and gathered up a quantity of the particles and took them to North Redwood, where it was demonstrated beyond a doubt that the glittering substance was gold. A search is now being made toward the finding of the main repository of gold.

EXPECT HIGH RATES.

Shippers of Grain and Coal Are Hustling for Tonnage.

Duluth, July 16.—The outlook is for high freight rates in the fall, and the situation with reference to grain, which promises an enormous crop, and coal, which is not yet moving very freely, indicates that the mines depending on wild tonnage will do well to hustle shipments early. Grain for early fall shipment is now being contracted at Duluth on an equivalent of $1.12 for ore. Some of the largest independent vessel interests have notified grain shippers that they will not be able to handle grain this year, as their boats are tied up with grain for so long a period as weather will permit ore to be shipped.

Vote on Village Incorporation.

Crookston, Minn., July 13.—The citizens of the town of Hendrum in Norman county have been granted permission by the county commissioners to hold a special election on the 17th of August to vote on the question of incorporating as a village. Four hundred people are embraced in the territory to be incorporated.

ONE MORTALLY WOUNDED.

St. Paul Excursion Ends in a Double Shooting.

St. Paul, July 12.—In a shooting affray during the landing of the Waiters' union steamboat excursion at the Jackson street wharf early Friday morning Edward Rooney of Duluth was fatally wounded and Louis Kantrowich of St. Paul received a dangerous wound in the abdomen. Rooney is very low and will scarcely survive the day. Kantrowich will likely recover.

Edward Healey, a waiter, is under arrest charged with having done the shooting. He admits the accusation but claims to have acted in self-defense.

The shooting occurred shortly after the boat landed. During the trip down the river Rooney and several companions, it is alleged, started a gambling game. Healey, as one of the committee of arrangements, objected to the game and closed it down. This angered the gamblers and threats were made against Healey, who, as soon as the boat landed, tried to get away without trouble, so he claims.

He was forestalled, however, and claims to have been attacked by a gang that followed him. He was knocked down, but got up and took shelter behind a wagon on the wharf. The crowd closed in on him and then he whipped out a revolver and began shooting.

Rooney fell at the first shot with a bullet in his abdomen. Healey then ran, closely followed by Kantrowich. When partly up the Jackson street hill Healey turned and fired at Kantrowich, shooting him in the abdomen.

DRIVEN INSANE BY GRIEF.

Child's Death Results in Mother Losing Her Reason.

Mankato, Minn., July 12.—Mrs. Margaret E. Catlin of Danville has been adjudged insane and ordered committed to the St. Peter asylum. A year ago she was sent to Rochester asylum, but was subsequently discharged.

The case presents some unusually sad features. Mrs. Catlin is a handsome young woman and two years ago had a happy home with two pretty children. One day the children strayed some distance from the house, but presently the older one returned and told her mother that the baby was asleep under the fence. The mother went to carry home her sleeping infant, but when she arrived on the spot was horrified to find that the baby was not sleeping, but dead.

The fence was of barbed wire and the little one had become entangled and fatally injured and sank down under the wires to die. The shock dethroned the poor mother's reason.

WORKERS ARE SCARCE.

Railroad Contractors Are Unable to Secure Laborers.

St. Paul, July 9.—Reports received at the general offices of the coast lines indicate a growing uneasiness among the farmers of Northern Minnesota and Dakota over the possibility of a scarcity of laborers for the harvest. Railroad contractors are reported to be unable to secure sufficient help to carry on their work, in spite of the fact that high wages are offered. Many contractors have agreed to complete their particular work within a certain time. Rather than suffer a forfeit they will be obliged to offer stronger inducements for laborers. This fact does not cheer the farmer.

RELATIVES INDICTED.

An Alleged Conspiracy to Murder by Starvation.

Olivia, Minn., July 12.—The grand jury has brought in three indictments against Martin Johnson Hage and his wife, Johannes, for conspiracy against the mother of Mrs. Hage to murder her by slow starvation. The other two indictments are along the same line. The couple live near Fairfax on a section of land of their own. They are accused of having been too stingy to support the old lady and took this means of getting rid of her, confining her in a pen in the barn without a bed of any kind and not giving her anything to eat for days at a time.

CHARGED WITH SMUGGLING.

Clerk of the Steamer Bon Ami Under Arrest.

Duluth, July 16.—R. Williams, clerk of the steamer Bon Ami, was arrested by Port Collector Willcutts, on a charge of smuggling liquor into the United States from Canada. Port Arthur is the point from which the liquor is alleged to have been taken.

Williams was arraigned before United States Court Commissioner T. H. Pressnell and gave bonds for his appearance. He denies that he is guilty.

Lands Subject to Entry.

St. Cloud, July 10.—A report of the amount of lands remaining vacant and subject to entry in the St. Cloud district has just been completed by the officials of the local land office. The present total acreage in the district is 104,970 acres, against 145,000 acres a year ago, and is located in the following counties: Aitkin, 17,440; Cass, 32,280; Crow Wing, 9,290; Hubbard, 29,000; Itasca, 3,340; Kanabec, 240; Morrison, 840; Pine, 9,080; Todd, 440; Wadena, 2,920.

Death Was Instantaneous.

St. Cloud, July 13.—Edward Wolter, who visited Buckman town, Morrison county yesterday, brings news of a fatal accident which befell a young farmer named William Bausman, Thursday. In attempting to stop a runaway team he was struck in the head by the wagon pole, killing him instantly. He was 38 years of age and leaves a wife and several children.

White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed color, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

WILL LIVE IN SOUTH AFRICA

Kuebue Beveridge, the Sculptress, Has Left Us For Good and All.

Miss Kuebue Beveridge, the sculptress who made a short visit to New York recently, has gone back across the Atlantic. The lady was very much displeased at the treatment she received at the hands of the New York customs officials on her recent arrival at that port. Her baggage was overhauled, and she was made to pay $103 duties before her effects would be released. She says she will never come again to America, but she may change her mind. She is now in London, where she will remain for a short time and then go on to South Africa, where her home will hereafter be.

MISS KUEHNE BEVERIDGE.

Buckles and Buttons.

Buttons and buckles—what an incessant chorus these adjuncts make! On behalf of the former a good deal of applique work is employed, this taking the form of a delicate tracery in gilt, silver or aluminium on groundworks of smoked pearl, mother of pearl and imitation colored stones of every sort, kind and description.

Amethysts are wondrously imitated and have become a great vogue. Amethysts and topazes have alike been out of favor and fashion for their allotted span, and the time is just ripe for their return.

Before the shrine of the turquoise all continue to bow in adoring worship, but this pretty blue stone has become a trifle too familiar to the sight to be altogether pleasant.

Many are doing their best to take up coral seriously. Coral buttons appliqued with dull silver are especially decorative. Brobdingnagian buttons are not nearly so much in vogue as they were. Of course they are to be found here and there when some particular period or style commands their presence. But decidedly of more pronounced popularity is the small button arranged in detached groups—two, three and four, as fancy dictates. As to buckles, their story is a long and bewildering one. Scarcely in millinery can a buckle go wrong, and in this department do they seem to grow longer and longer and narrower and narrower every day. And it is buckles that create a decorative item in one's chic visiting toilet.—Washington Star.

Moved Her Big Tree.

A woman of means who owned a handsome country house on the Hudson was very fond of two beautiful beech trees which stood near her residence. A few seasons ago she bought a house at Newport and decided that thereafter she would spend her summers at that resort of fashion. Accordingly she sold her place on the Hudson, but in parting with it she could not bear to leave behind her favorite beeches. She consulted a firm that is engaged in the business of moving large trees, and it undertook the task of transporting the two full grown beeches from eastern New York to Newport. The undertaking was carried out with great care. The trees were taken up, placed on scows, carried down the Hudson and up Long Island sound to Newport, where they were set up before the woman's new residence. A quantity of the soil of their former home had been brought along to sustain them until they should become accustomed to their new surroundings, and the trees received every reasonable care and assistance. The experiment was a complete success. The moving of these two trees is said to have cost their owner $30,000, and the feat is probably the long distance record for the transplanting of trees.—Earl Mayo in Woman's Home Companion.

Just a Little Fad.

She was in a street car. She had all the little up to date touches about her costume, and the very latest fad was prettily exploited in her coiffure. Holding up those stray locks in the back was not a gold loop, nor yet a pearl bar, nor even the popular horseshoe, but a tiny bow of narrow satin ribbon. It was not baby ribbon, but so close to it the difference in width was hardly distinguishable. The flowers in her hat were lavender and so was the ribbon.

This is quite the latest fad of the summer girl. The short hairs are gathered up and tied by the ribbon, which has been slipped through a strand of the long hair. Velvet ribbon is frequently used, and black, of course, is preferred by many.

A Novel Wedding.

A bicycle wedding took place in Norfolk, England, the other day. The bride and bridegroom, bridesmaids and guests, making a party of about 20, all rode to the church on gayly decorated machines. The bride was in spotless white, nor were the orange blossoms and the veil left out. The bridesmaids, also in white, were crowned with wreaths of pink roses. Fortunately Dame Nature smiled on the scene.

We have 19 tracts aggregating over 1000 acres, scattered through the best portions of the oil districts of Jefferson and Hardin Counties, Texas, two of which are near the great gushers which have made Beaumont famous.

Having determined to obtain a gusher if possible, we are now boring a well on land just purchased on Spindle Top Hill, only 600 feet southeast of the famous "Beatty Gusher," which sold for $1,250,000, and 600 feet northeast of the Hogg-Swayne gusher which has just come in; practically between the two. This land cost a large sum and is considered sure gusher land. No gusher has yet been obtained in Texas except on this hill and no well driven on it has failed to be a gusher, producing in the neighborhood of 70,000 barrels a day. This purchase reduces the speculative element in this venture to the minimum; practically eliminates it.

For development purposes we are now offering a limited amount of treasury stock at 25 cents a share; par value $1.00. The price will soon be advanced.

We feel safe in recommending the purchase of this stock, believing we will obtain at least enough oil to pay good dividends on its cost, and expect to and believe we will obtain a gusher within 90 days, which will at once make it worth many times what it cost you.

WILL DRAIN LANDS

STATE COMMISSION ORDERS DITCHES IN FOUR NORTHERN COUNTIES.

RED LAKE COUNTY GETS THE FIRST CRACK AT THE APPROPRIATION.

The state drainage commission, consisting of Gov. S. R. VanSant, State Auditor R. C. Dunn and Secretary of State P. E. Hanson, met at the capitol Saturday morning. Geo. A. Ralph, of Crookston, was appointed engineer of the commission.

Mr. Ralph was instructed to survey and report on the ditches to be dug in the following townships: Township 150, range 38 east, Red Lake county; township 146, range 46-47, Norman county; township 156, range 44 45, Marshall county; township 192, range 41-42, Roseau county.

The surveyor was also ordered to estimate the cost of such ditches and to describe the land that will be benefited by their construction. He is also requested to ascertain if condemnation proceedings would be necessary to secure the right of way for the ditches. The board allows him $150 per month for his services.

The projected work is but a small part of that asked for by the counties interested. These counties have not been backward in pressing their claims and Red Lake county alone asks for as much as $10,000 of the entire appropriation of $25 000.

The members of the drainage board are anxious to divide the appropriation as fairly and justly as possible among the counties which have state lands to be benefited; but as the law required that they finish all ditches undertaken they have commenced very modestly.

Secretary of State Hansen says that the money will be applied this year only in localities where there is the most need, and where the greatest good can be accomplished. The surveyor was instructed to make all haste in his work and to report to the commission at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Ralph went out sou-heast in the Lost river country, Tuesday to start his work and will spend two or three days there. Mr. Ralph will do the field work alone, but will be found equal to the responsibility. It is the intention of the board to complete all work in the fall that is started this summer.

Eugene Field's Daughter to Marry.

Chicago announces the engagement of Miss Mary French Field, daughter of the late Eugene Field, to William C. Engler. Miss Field, called "Trottie" by her intimates, is probably the best known young woman in Chicago. Soon after the death five years ago of her gifted father she became a public reader, presenting the works of her father so entertainingly as to become widely popular throughout the country.

MARY FRENCH FIELD.

Mr. Engler is a Marylander who has lived in Chicago for several years and has made his home for the past six months at the Field residence in Clarendon avenue. He is secretary of a big manufacturing concern and is popular in North Shore social circles.

The marriage is to be celebrated in the fall.

Miss Beveridge Angry.

Miss Kuehne Beveridge, the sculptress, who was made to pay $103 duty on her baggage by the customs officers when she arrived at New York the other day, has sailed away for London, vowing she will never again come to this country because of her treatment by the customs officers. Miss Beveridge will remain only a short time in London, but will go on to South Africa, where she intends to make her home.

Secretary at Seoul.

Gordon Paddock, the young New Yorker whom President McKinley recently named for the post of first secretary of the American legation at Seoul, Korea, went from New York to Washington the other day to report before going to his new post of duty. Friends gave him an elaborate "stag" dinner at the Union club by way of a godspeed.

The Colorado Beetle.

If those who desire to kill the beetles and slugs on their potato and tomato vines would mix their paris green with an equal amount of slaked lime or one pound of it with two pounds of land plaster and dust the vines with the mixture when they are a little damp from dew or rain, they would destroy the insects better than they do by spraying with the paris green in water. The poison would not wash off as easily in a shower, and it would be easy to tell when it had washed off without waiting to learn it by seeing the vines half eaten up and slugs killed. The lime or plaster would, like the lime in bordeaux mixture, prevent injury to the foliage, and they are also supposed to have some effect in preventing blight.

FREE TRADE ASKED

DULUTH BUSINESS MEN FAVOR CLOSE COMMERCIAL RELATIONS WITH CANADA.

Health Officials of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan to Confer—Business Portion of Cambridge Destroyed by Fire—United States Steel Corporation Buys Another Minnesota Iron Mine—General State News.

Duluth, July 21.—Absolute free trnde with Canada is very desirable, according tu the Duluth board ut trade. That body has adopted a resolution declaring t. t such condition would be of lasting benefit to the American people.

This action has aroused the lumbermen and the Duluth Lumbermen's association will hold a meeting in the near future and adopt a resolution protesting against free trade with Canada as far as lumber is concerned. The iron ore people will take but little interest.

Grain men have long contended that the tariff on Canadian wheat did not protect the American farmer, and that he would get as much for his wheat if there were no tariff, the argument being that the price of the commodity was fixed by the visible supply and the foreign demand. The resolution adopted by the Duluth board of trade was as follows:

Whereas, The increased export trade has been a large factor in industrial and agricultural prosperity of the United States; and

Whereas, Trade with Canada, our nearest neighbor, is now hampered by needless, useless and in many cases obsolete conditions that are working an injury to a large oumber of American people and doing none of them any good, be it

Resolved, That it is the opinion of the members of the Duluth board of trade that absolute and untrammeled free trade with Canada would be to the lasting benefit of the American people, and that the Duluth board of trade send the president of the United States the following:

"The Duluth board of trade, gratefully recognizing your interest in all questions of trade relations with foreign nations, earnestly petition that such stepa aa are necessary be taken to prepare, on the basia of equivaleot concessions, a reciprocal trade agreement between the United States and Canada and that the aame be brought before congress at ita next sesaion."

TO WIPE OUT SMALLPOX.

Systematic Fight Proposed by Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan.

Milwaukee, July 22.—Governor La Follette has issued a request tu the state board of health for a special meeting in regard to the extinction of smallpox, to be held at Madison next week.

At that meeting arrangements will be made for a conference of all the boards of health of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota to plan for the extinction of the disease in this portion of the country, especially in the logging districts, which are permeated with cases of the epidemic.

The plans for the work are not formulated, but at its meeting next week the Wisconsin board will formulate a scheme of operating which will be presented to the officials of the other states when the conference is held. The trouble is now centered in the northern part of Wisconsin, the upper peninsula of Michigan and Minnesota.

By the constant interchange of business between the three districts the disease spreads readily and unless steps are taken before fall sets in there is every reason to believe that all three statea are threatened with ravage by the disease. The meeting will be held at Duluth in August.

CAUSED A HEAVY LOSS.

Business Portion of Cambridge, Minn., Destroyed by Fire.

Cambridge, Minn., July 22.—Fire awept the business portion of this town during the night aod inflicted ao aggregate loss of over $60,000. The fire is auppoaed to have atarted in the rear of Presley'a drug store at 11:15 p. m. and it was not until 3 o'clock in the morning that the flames were brought under control. The losses are:

Merchants hotel, $12,000; P. O. Peterson, $12,000; Presley's drug store, $4,000; Alfred Smith, general atore, $9,000; H. G. Johnson, general atore, $11,000; Lounard'a saloon, $5,000; Satterlund'a jewelry store, $2,000; C. L. Johnson & Co., clothiog store, $3,500.

Several barns were also destroyed and at times it seemed as if the flames would extend to every building in the place.

The fire had obtained a good start before being diacovered and the buildings were on easy prey.

The guesta of the hotel had plenty of time to escape and saved most of their effects.

MINNESOTA MINE SOLD.

United States Steel Company Secures the Zenith at Ely.

Duluth, July 18.—The fee of the Zenith mine at Ely has been purchased by the United States Steel company. The consideration is withheld.

The steel compaoy already controlled the property through a lease owned by the Oliver Iron Mining company. The principal owner of the Zenith was S. S. Curry of Ishpeming. Bob Whiteside of Duluth was also heavily interested.

THE BURLINGTON EXTENSION.

Will Be Running Cars into St. Paul Sept. 1.

Chicago, July 1?.—Sept. 1 has been set as the date fur upening the extension of the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northero road into St. Paul. It wss expected to have been opened by now, but unforeseen delaya have been occasioned by difficulties encouotered in making a cut near Walcott, three miles aouth of Faribault. Heavy raina fell in that section and flooded the ground so that springs have broken out in the cut, discharging two streams of water 12 inchea deep. All efforts to drain the cut have as yet proved abortive and the contractors estimate that it will take at least three days longer before they can resume operationa in the work of construction.

A traffic arrangement has been made with the Milwaukee and St. Paul road whereby the Burlington, Cedar Rapids and Northern secures the right to run its trains over the St. Paul tracks from a point seven miles north of Faribault to Rosemount and from Newport into St. Paul. The Rosemount-Newport line, under construction, will be ready for operation within two weeks. The Rock Island will use the extension to get into St. Paul as soon as it is completed.

OPERATE IN PHILIPPINES.

Minnesota Men Interested in a Development Company.

Washington, July 23.—The Minnesota and Manila Industrial and Development compaoy is the title of a company of enterprising business men of St. Paul, New York and Washington. The company will, it is understood, open a large supply house in Manila, and if it proves as successful as anticipated, branch stores will be located elsewhere in different Philippine cities. Frank S. Challoner of New York is in Washington looking up information concerning any rules and regulations which the war department and insular bureau exact of Americans in the Philippines. The new tariff between the United States and the islands has not yet been promulgated, but it is expected that it will be passed upon and approved by the president next week when he is in Washington.

STATE OF UNREST.

Condition Now in Evidence in Official Circles of Northern Pacific.

St. Paul, July 23.—The official announcement of the election of Jamea J. Hill to the directorate of the Northern Pacific road haa caused a state of unrest in Northero Pacific circles.

"We are all up in the air," said one of the officiala today. "Everybody is looking for aomething to drop."

Locally, among officials of other roads, it appeara that the opinion prevails to aome extent that the personnel of the Northern Pacific directorate doea not provide for much power in the handa of Mr. Hill. Whatever intentions he may have in respect to the Northern Pacific system, he cannot, they claim, carry them out without the full consent of the board.

Run Over by Fire Engine.

St. Paul, July 18.—August Chemidlin, 74 years old, was run over by Engine No. 4 of the local fire department at Seventh and Wacouta atreeta. The wheela passed over his right leg and pelvis and inflicted injuries from which he died 20 minutes later. The horses attached to the engine became unmanageable and ran on to the sidewalk, causing the fatal accident.

Both Likely to Die.

St. Paul, July 16.—As a result of a gasoline explosion Mr. and Mrs. Bernhardt Sandler, furriers in the Espy block at 131 East Fifth atreet, are at the city hospital suffering from burns, which in both casea will probably prove fatal. Mrs. Sandler cannot recover and the physiciana say Mr. Sandler'a chances are about even between life and death.

Thrown Into the Lake.

Stillwater, Minn., July 16.—While bathing in Lake St. Croix and playing on a lumber raft near Atwood's "A" mill, Will Johnson of Bloomington, Ind., aged 16, an employe of the Gentry trained animala show, was drowned being thrown into the lake by Yellow Watkina, also a circus hand, who had been with the show a couple of weeks.

Need Eighty Thousand Hands.

St. Paul, July 22.—Conservative estimates place the number of men required to harvest and thresh this year's crop in Minnesota, North and South Dakota at from 75,000 to 80,000. This estimate places the requirements of North Dakota and Minnesota at 30,000 each and the number for South Dakota at 15,000 or 20,000.

Touched a Live Wire.

St. Paul, July 16.—John Corcoran, a lineman in the employ of the St. Paul Gas Light company, was thrown from a pole at Third and Robert atreets by an electric shock and so badly injured that he died several hours later at St. Joseph'a hospital. Corcoran'a body was terribly mangled by the fall.

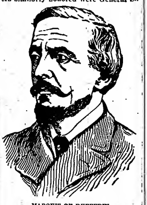
White Man Turned Yellow.

Great consternation was felt by the friends of M. A. Hogarty of Lexington, Ky., when they saw he was turning yellow. His skin slowly changed color, also his eyes, and he suffered terribly. His malady was Yellow Jaundice. He was treated by the best doctors, but without benefit. Then he was advised to try Electric Bitters, the wonderful Stomach and Liver remedy, and he writes: "After taking two bottles I was wholly cured." A trial proves its matchless merit for all Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles. Only 50c. Sold by W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

PEOPLE OF THE DAY

Honored With Carnegie.

The Marquis of Dufferin, who with the marchioness has been very prominent of late in English royal circles was honored by the Glasgow university the other day. The university conferred upon him the degree of LL. D. Andrew Carnegie was a recipient of the same honor at the same time. Others similarly honored were General Sir Archibald Hunter, General Ian Hamilton and three Glasgow women. This was the first time a woman received the degree from Glasgow. The occasion was a memorable one, as the university was celebrating the four hundred and fiftieth anniversary of its foundation, and delegates were present from all over the world.



MARQUIS OF DUFFERIN.

Joe Jefferson's "Horse."

Many of Joseph Jefferson's amusing sayings are quoted by James S. Metcalfe in the account in The Ladies' Home Journal of a visit paid to the veteran actor in his winter quarters at Palm Beach, Fla. He uses a tricycle for the short journeys possible about that place. Once as he dismounted from it he remarked: "My horse is like David Harum's; he'll stand without hitching. And he's better than a bicycle because he doesn't have to have anything to lean up against." On another occasion when caught in a rainstorm and the wind made it difficult for one rain coat to keep both the actor and his companion dry Mr. Jefferson said philosophically, not complainingly: "I don't mind being wet all over, because then you don't notice any one place. But this being wet in spots kind of calls your attention to them."

Mrs. Wu Goes Home Alone.

Mrs. Wu, the wife of the Chinese minister, has left Washington. It is announced that she will go to San Francisco and there take a steamer to China, where she will remain for the summer. Mr. Wu did not accompany her, and one of the jokes that are going the rounds of the diplomatic set is that he was afraid to go home for fear the powers that he have not taken kindly to the suggestions he has made regarding various reforms for China. Mr. Wu does not intend to stay in Washington during the hot spell, but he is telling his friends that he hopes to be able to make himself comfortable at some of the American resorts. Mrs. Wu was accompanied by a good sized retinue.

Pleasure in Store for Readers of This Paper

The opening chapters of a most delightful story will appear in these columns soon—a story that will be read with pleasure and interest, we are sure, by all who begin it. It is entitled

By Joseph A. Altsheler

The plot is laid in Revolutionary days and the three important characters are an American cavalryman, a beautiful English girl and a most intelligent horse. The young man makes the girl a prisoner of war. From intense hate of her captor the feelings of the heroine change by gradual stages to that of loyal love. The feeling extends to the horse and is reciprocated by both man and beast. The story is charmingly written.

We have 19 tracts aggregating over 1000 acres, scattered through the best portions of the oil districts of Jefferson and Hardin Counties, Texas, two of which are near the great gushers which have made Beaumont famous.

Having determined to obtain a gusher if possible, we are now boring a well on land just purchased on Spindle Top Hill, only 600 feet southeast of the famous "Beatty Gusher," which sold for $1,250,000, and 600 feet northeast of the Hogg-Swayne gusher which has just come in; practically between the two. This land cost a large sum and is considered sure gusher land. No gusher has yet been obtained in Texas except on this hill and no well driven on it has failed to be a gusher, producing in the neighborhood of 70,000 barrels a day. This purchase reduces the speculative element in this venture to the minimum; practically eliminates it.

For development purposes we are now offering a limited amount of treasury stock at 25 cents a share; par value $1.00. The price will soon be advanced.

We feel safe in recommending the purchase of this stock, believing we will obtain at least enough oil to pay good dividends on its cost, and expect to and believe we will obtain a gusher within 90 days, which will at once make it worth many times what it cost you.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

PHIL. A. KAUFER.

Published weekly. Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Red Lake Falls.

☞ All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in on or before Tuesday noon.

CREAMERY ACTIVITY.

Minnesota's facilities as a butter-making state, already of wide-spread fame are to be increased vastly during the present season if the present plans that have been outlined by Dairy and Food Commissioner McConnel are carried to completion says the Pioneer Press. Reports that have come to him indicate that at least one hundred new creameries will be established this summer.

The state has at present 785 creameries, whose combined annual product runs up into the millions of dollars. Three inspectors are engaged to look after these plants, insist upon their sanitary condition and keep a constant watch for law violating. The inspectors are urged to encourage the establishment of new creameries, either on the co-operative plan or by private capital. The work has been conducted so successfully that the growth of the butter making industry in the state this year is expected to eclipse all former efforts.

The plans for these creameries do not come from any particular section of the state, but interest has been awakened through all the commonwealth. The interest is especially intense, however at Hinkley and surrounding towns. This portion of the state is recovering rapidly from the effects of the big fires that swept them off the map. The pastures have been restored and the country has been resettled to an extent that will warrant the establishment of creameries, with the assurance that they will be paying investments.

One feature of the reports submitted to Mr. McConnel that is considered especially gratifying is that many of the creameries abandoned during the depression are being rebuilt and will be in full operation hereafter.

The Crookston College catalogue for the coming year is just out. It is a very interesting pamphlet showing what progress a private school can have when it meets the demands of the people. This is the seventh annual catalogue. The school opened up in 1895 with but 3 students, and last year it had an enrollment of over 200. It has over 100 graduates, many of them receiving $60 to $85 per month. The catalogue can be had free by sending a postal card to J. C. Sathre. It speaks for itself. It is illustrated with pictures of the faculty, buildings, etc.

Admiral Schley has finally asked for a court of inquiry into the circumstances attending the battle of Santiago. It is doubtful whether this action is a wise one on the part of Schley. The dignified reserve which he has maintained during the interval since the battle has strengthened his hold on the people. The Gazette sees only confusion worse confunded, with Schley's lustre dimned, as a result of the inquiry, no matter how much the preponderance of evidence may favor him. A thin veil between a live hero and the public seems to be conducive to continued infatuation, anyhow.

The Best Remedy for Stomach and Bowel Troubles.

"I have been in the drug business for twenty years and have sold most all of the proprietary medicines of any note. Among the entire list I have never found anything to equal Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for all stomach and bowel troubles," says O. W. Wakefield, of Columbus, Ga. "This remedy cured two severe cases of cholera morbus in my family and I have recommended and sold hundreds of bottles of it to my customers to their entire satisfaction. It affords a quick and sure cure in a pleasant form." For sale by W. A. Schreiter, Druggist.

During last May an infant child of our neighbor was suffering from cholera infantum. The doctors had given up all hopes for recovery. I took a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy to the house, telling them I felt sure it would do good if used according to directions. In two days' time the child had fully recovered. The child is now vigorous and healthy. I have recommended this remedy frequently and have never known it to fail.—Mrs. Curtis Baker, Bookwalter, Ohio Sold by W. A. Schreiter.

Will Be Published in This Paper

It is a story of Revolutionary times and recounts the thrilling adventures of a brave young American cavalryman who took as his prisoner a venturesome and handsome English girl, the daughter of a British officer.

Their enforced association as prisoner and captor under trying circumstances showed to each the worth of the other, and in the end both became prisoners each to the other. The tale is most cleverly told and is full of life.

July 26 is a great day in St. Joseph's parish. It is dedicated in the Catholic calendar to St. Anne, mother of the virgin, and one of the largest St. Anne societies in the northwest flourishes here. She is the patroness of Canada, and her shrine at the church in Beaupre, near Quebec, is the Lourdes of the New World, attracting pilgrims from all parts of America. The only relic is that of a fragment of a finger bone of St. Anne, taken there in 1668. It was long the custom of ships to stop in front of the little town and fire a broadside in honor of Canada's patroness. In the old French days the whole shore was lined with Indian wigwams, and the more devout of the converts would crawl on their knees from the river bank to the altar. Every year there has been a steady increase in the number of visitors. A year or two ago a party of fifty or more went from St. Paul and Minneapolis and all claimed to have been relieved of ailments by asking her prayers. The Redemptorist Fathers are in charge of the church, and sermons are preached in many different languages as occasion requires. The present church is a most handsome structure, costing nearly a quarter of a million dollars. It is surrounded by a number of beautiful lateral chapels, and along the road are small chapels. In front of the church is a splendid statue of the saint. The church contains many pictures of ships, representing marvelous deliverances from storms, through the aid of St. Anne, and another feature is the large collection of crutches, canes, spectacles etc., left by those who suddenly found they no longer required them. The wrist bone of St. Anne was sent to New York in 1892, and is shown occasionally in the Church of St. Jean Baptiste, to the sick, and wonderful cures are reported. The famous relic is watched with zealous care, in view of numerous attempts to steal it.

A WORTHY SUCCESSOR.

"Something New Under The Sun."

All Doctors have tried to cure Catarrh by the use of powders, acid gases, inhalers and drugs in paste form. Their powders dry up the mucuous membranes causing them to crack open and bleed. The powerful acids used in the inhalers have entirely eaten away the same membranes that their makers have aimed to cure, while pastes and ointments cannot reach the disease. An old and experienced practitioner who has for many years made a close study and specialty of the treatment of Catarrh, has at last perfected a treatment which when faithfully used, not only relieves at once, but permanently cures Catarrh, by removing the cause, stopping the discharges, and curing all inflammation. It is the only remedy known to science that actually reaches the afflicted parts. This wonderful remedy is known as "Snuffles the guaranteed Catarrh Cure" and is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, each package containing internal and external medicine sufficient for a full month's treatment and everything necessary to its perfect use.

"Snuffles" is the only perfect Catarrh Cure ever made and is now recognized as the only safe and positive cure for that annoying and disgusting disease. It cures all inflammation quickly and permanently and is also wonderfully quick to relieve Hay Fever or Cold in the Head.

CATARRH when neglected often leads to CONSUMPTION—"SNUFFLES" will save you if you use it at once. It is no ordinary remedy, but a complete treatment which is positively guaranteed to cure CATARRH in any form or stage if used according to the directions which accompany each package. Don't delay but send for it at once, and write full particulars as to your condition, and you will receive special advice from the discoverer of this wonderful remedy regarding your case without cost to you beyond the regular price of "SNUFFLES" the "GUARANTEED CATARRH CURE."

This remedy is in no sense a nostrum but is a specific for this disease only, and is so skillfully devised and prepared that it is thoroughly soluble and pleasant to the taste, so that it can be given in a cup of tea or coffee without the knowledge of the person taking it. Thousands of Drunkards have cured themselves with this priceless remedy, and so many more have been cured and made temperate men by having the "CURE" administered by loving friends and relatives without their knowledge in coffee or tea, and believe today that they discontinued drinking of their own free will. DO NOT WAIT. Do not be deluded by apparent and misleading "improvement." Drive out the disease at once and for all time. The "HOME GOLD CURE" is sold at the extremely low price of One Dollar, thus placing within reach of everybody a treatment more effectual than others costing $25 to $50. ELECTRICITY AT WORK.

San Francisco's largest suburb, Oakland, obtains its electric force from a stream 150 miles away. Experience proves that long-distance transmission of electric power is a success in every way.

Forty thousand volts were successfully transmitted over 140 miles with a loss of not over five per cent. from the power plant on the Yuba river and used in propelling the electric railway cars in the city of Oakland, Cal.

A self-generating electric light buoy off Husum, on the North sea, is so sensitive and so efficient that the slightest motion of the waves operates it. This automatic light has been sufficiently tested to predict its general use.

A German inventor has devised electric eyeglasses or spectacles. The frames are made of alternate layers of zinc and copper, which being moistened with a dilute acid gives an electric current which is claimed to restore dimmed vision.

A progressive if not overhonest New Jersey farmer tapped the feeder of a trolley line, conveying the electric current under his truck garden by means of a network of wire, and had his radishes in half the time it took his slower neighbors to raise them.

Edison's dream, and we hope his prediction, bids fair to be realized by the discovery of immense bodies of the rare mineral, cadmium, in a Colorado mine. Cadmium is used by Edison in his recently invented storage battery, and he declared that with such a discovery "electricity would become cheaper than water."

It has been proved that electrified seed germinates more rapidly than others, and also by burying in the soil one zinc plate and one copper plate, placed vertically and connected by a wire, that potatoes and other roots grown in the electrified space thus secured produce about three times the crop that others do in similar soil close by, but without the electricity. It is also applied to the ripening process and found to be successful.

WHERE THE KAISER RULES.

Golden and diamond weddings were celebrated by 614 couples in Prussia last year, and the state contributed medals to each husband and wife.

A local Berlin paper recently announced that an invalid soldier had no other way of passing his time than collecting picture postcards. This has been responded to by some 5,000 cards from all parts of the world.

Germany's two African possessions are nearly equal in size, the sphere of influence on the east coast having an estimated area of 345,000 square miles; on the west coast the territory embraced is about 342,000 square miles.

Nearly 8,000 persons committed suicide last year in Germany. Roughly speaking, the proportion of men to women was three to one. More than a quarter of the suicides were persons mentally infirm. Nearly one-half had been addicted to drink.

RIVERS AND RIVER SYSTEMS.

There are five rivers in the world which drain over a million square miles. They are the Amazon, La Plata, Obi, Congo and Mississippi.

The Paraguay river, so called from the republic of the same name on its banks, is 1,800 miles in length. At points in its lower course it is from five to fifteen miles wide.

The outflow of the Nile varies from 16,000 cubic feet a second in June to 400,000 in September. From these figures the value of the new Assouan dam in preventing this gigantic waste will be plain.

The Mississippi is the longest river in the world, but estimated by amount of water discharged into the sea it ranks third only, the Amazon discharging 1,000,000 cubic feet a second, and the La Plata 850,000, to the Mississippi's 500,000.

OVER 40 MILES OF DITCHES.

Drainage Work Under Way in Red Lake County Will Benefit Lands to the Extent of $500,000.

No County in Minnesota is Doing as Much.

Most comprehensive are the drainage plans now on foot in Red Lake county, and when the systems already undertaken are perfected, there will be but comparatively little waste land left in the county. The great benefit resulting from the construction of the Sanders-Black River ditch last year was apparent this spring, and thousands of acres that would otherwise be standing under water, have been rendered productive and will even this wet year yield abundant crops.

Perhaps in no county of Minnesota has the drainage problem been given greater consideration than in Red Lake, and the result is today there are no less than forty miles of ditches projected, and which will without a doubt be constructed while the Terrebonne ditch is already nearing completion and the Sanders-Black River ditch is discharging an immense volume of water and doing inestimable good to the country drained.

The ditches that will next be constructed, and which are receiving the attention of the board number no less than seven.

One feature of the ditch work now under development, is that the earth excavated will in most cases be thrown out on one side, with a view to making a high, dry roadway along the route. Where the route follows section lines, this is a most practical plan, combining drainage with good roads in results.

One ditch runs directly east from St. Hilaire for eight and a half miles and alongside will be constructed a highway that will prove not only a boon to the settlers for miles on each side, but for the merchants of St. Hilaire as well, since it taps a country which, although tributary in point of location to St. Hilaire, yet has contributed a large patronage to Red Lake Falls. This share of that territory's patronage the county seat may expect to bid good bye to unless equally good roads are made out from this city.

The total cost of the seven new ditches as estimated by the engineers will be $32,565.74, which is born by the beneficiaries of the ditches. Bonds are issued to pay for the work, and the lands benefited are assessed to pay the interest and to create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal when due. But the vast benefits certain to be realized have overcome the inevitable opposition to the enterprise which is bound to result in so much good to the individuals affected and the county at large.

The report of the engineer on file with the auditor shows the estimated cost of the several ditches to be as follows:

Wyandotte and River Falls Ditch No. 1	$8220 68
Wyandotte No. 1	$4729 96
Wyandotte and River Falls No. 2	$7592 20
Thief River Falls No. 1	$7337 60
Black River and River Falls	$1668 90
Red Lake Falls No. 1	$1588 30
Lake Pleasant	$3037 00

For those who care to trace the routes of the ditches on the accompanying county map, they are given as follows:

Thief River Falls ditch No. 1 will be five miles in length. Starting at southwest quarter of section 24 in Norden township, it runs a mile and a half east, thence one mile south, one mile east, one mile south, and a half mile east, to the Red Lake river on the south line of Thief River Falls' corporate limits.

The Black River and River Falls ditch commences at southeast corner of southeast quarter section 25, in Black River township, running thence west two miles, south one mile, terminating in a ravine.

Red Lake Falls Ditch No. 1 commences at southeast corner of northeast quarter of section one, Red Lake Falls, running due west to centre of section four, three and a half miles, and terminating in a ravine.

Wyandotte and River Falls Ditch No. 1 is the most extensive. It begins at centre of section 10 in Wyandotte, running diagonally across northwest to the south east quarter of section four, thence due west eight and a half miles to the Red Lake River at St. Hilaire, at a point near the steel bridge.

Wyandotte and River Falls Ditch No. 2 is about five miles in length. Commences at the southeast corner of the southwest quarter section 22, River Falls, running due east three miles; thence diagonally across sections 30, 31 and 32, terminating in a slough in northwest quarter of section five, Emardville township.

Wyandotte Ditch No. 1 runs from southeast corner of southeast quarter of section 28, Wyandotte, directly west 2¼ miles, intercepting the longer ditch on southeast quarter of section 30.

The Lake Pleasant ditch starts at the southeast corner of the southeast quarter of section 3, Lake Pleasant township, running north 2½ miles, east a quarter of a mile, and terminating in a coulee leading to the Red Lake river.

Summarizing the work that is being done this year, and the results of the Terrebonne ditch, now under construction and the Sanders and Black River ditch already built, we find the number of acres drained reaching the grand total of 93,095.

	ACRES.
Sanders-Black River	24,000
Terrebonne	9.005
Three Wyandotte	40,000
Thief River Falls No. 1	9.121
Red Lake Falls No. 1	3,363
Lake Pleasant	3,514
Black River and River Falls	3.092
Total	93,095

Estimating the benefits at an average of five dollars per acre, which is conservative, the actual increase in county farm valuation through the ditch enterprise foots up to half a million dollars.

LOST RIVER DRAINAGE.

Geo. E. Ralph, of Crookston, state drainage engineer, and friend of the newsgatherer, was in the city Saturday on his return from the Lost river country, where he thoroughly investigated the peculiar topography and made surveys preliminary to submitting his report to the state drainage commission. Mr. Ralph made the discovery that the popular theory in regard to the Lost river is erroneous, and that the cause of the river disappearing, is an underground lake, which has gradually filled up until the present depth is only from 3 to 7 feet, while it is covered with a mucky growth, from a foot and a half to two feet thick—a substance sufficiently strong to carry teams without difficulty. The lake at one time was about six and one half by four miles in area, and seems to have filled on account of the many crooks in the river leading out from it, which obstructed the current. The center of the lake, too, was very shallow and this alone would have helped along the filling in process. During the time of high water the lake overflows, causing considerable damage to adjacent farms. The plan is to cut a direct channel through to the outlet, and this can be readily done by merely removing the top crust. Then straighten out the river at the outlet and Mr. Ralph thinks there will be a wonderful improvement in the flood conditions as a result. $5,000 he estimates will do the work. From here he went to Marshall county, where he will survey a ditch at a point about twelve miles north of Thief River Falls through the towns of Newfolden and Marsh Grove into the Middle river. This ditch will not be an expensive one. Mr. Ralph thinks $3.000 will cover the cost. Roseau county conditions he is thoroughly familiar with, and without going over the proposed work there, he estimates that $8.000 is the least possible amount for which the work can be completed.

This would leave about $9,000 of the $25,000 still on hand, and there is some show that the much needed work in eastern Red Lake county may be gotten at this season. It is likely, too, that the meagre $25,000 appropriated for use this year will be overdrawn if the state drainage commission sees that economy will be effected on the long run by so doing.

Speaking of his trip to the Lost river country Mr. Ralph said:

"The development of that section strikes me as the most wonderful thing I have encountered in my travels. Five years ago the land was still the property of the Indians. Since the Red Lake reservation was thrown open to settlement all the developments now visible have been made. To day some of the finest farms in the northwest are to be found in that territory—with as large acreage, and fine buildings as you find in sections settled 20 years ago. The value of the farms is well up, too."

OH SUCH-FUN!

THE INDIAN BRAVES SCALPED IN THEIR OWN WIGWAMS.

THE SELECTS TAKE TWO GAMES AND TWO FAT PURSES.

The Red Lake Falls "Selects" and the Thief River "Indians" met on the diamond last Sunday for the first time this year and the result was two disastrous defeats for the Indians. The first game was played at St. Hilaire and was for a purse of $50 00. this went to the Selects by a score of 16 to 10. The second game was played on the Thief River Falls grounds and was for a purse of $75, and this was also easy money for the Selects, the score being 6 to 1.

In order to make sure of victory in the two games the Indians had imported "Dad" Clarke and Hunt from the Minneapolis league team to officiate as a battery. Of course it was thought that the Selects would be unable to hit a professional pitcher at all, but right here was where the Napoleonic managers of the Thief River Falls aggregation reckoned in vain. Had they watched the record of the Selects in the games played this summer they would have known that all the pitchers look alike to the local boys, and further that every pitcher they have gone against this summer has either had his reputation broken or so badly bent as to be of little use in the future. Had they only meditated a little they might have saved "Old Dad," the hero of the Bostonians and the pride of the Minneapolis leaguers, the humiliation of being pounded all over Red Lake county, and saved the old man a broken heart, and besides saved a good many shekels for their treasury.

The first game at St. Hilaire was as pretty an exhibition of fireworks as one could ever wish to see. It was biff, bang, slam from the time the first man stepped up to bat until the last man was put out in the ninth inning. Both pitchers were hit hard and often, but "Dad" Clarke was touched up for 24 safe hits while Thoele for the selects allowed only 14. The fielding of the Indians in the morning game was decidedly yellow, but this can be pardoned from the fact that the fielders became so tired from chasing the long hits of their opponents, that the misplays could be over looked. Wall for the Selects carried off the batting honors of the day, securing six safe hits out of as many times at bat. Besides hitting the ball safely every time at bat Wall played a perfect fielding game at first base for his team. Donovan of the Selects came close second for batting honors securing five safe hits out of six times at bat. Healy and Lachapelle of the Selects also were very handy with their clubs, and each succeeded in securing three long hits.

The score by innings:—

Selects	3 2 0 8 0 3 0 0 x—	16	24	3
Indians	1 0 5 0 0 0 4 0 0 -	10	14	9

Batteries, Thoele and Smith, "Dad" Clarke and Hunt.

Struckout, by Thoele 10, Clark 4.

SECOND GAME.

The Selects went to bat first in the afternoon game and Healy was the first man to face "Old Dad." The "Old Man" started out fierce and needed but three balls to retire Harry to a seat on the bench. Donovan was the next Select and he was retired by way of a short stop to first base. Then it was that the horns and magaphones of the Thief Riverites made merry and the townsmen from up the river really thought they had a chance to win, but their hopes were soon dashed to pieces by the hard hitting Selects. Wall, the next man up, put one down to Nason so fast that the Indians' second baseman couldn't handle it, and the big first baseman was safe. Then hits by Smith, Lachapelle and Pouliot coupled with two errors by the Indians, netted four runs for the Selects. These were enough to win the game and still have a very comfortable margin to spare.

Olson and Bailey were doing the battery work for the Selects, and Olson was absolutely invulnerable as

BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

AUTHOR OF "A SOLDIER OF MANHATTAN" "THE SUN OF SARATOGA" ETC.

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

CHAPTER I.

A TRYING SITUATION.

I looked at the prisoner, and I was vexed by doubt. With a battle on one side of him and a woman on the other what is a man to do? She returned my gaze with great, pure eyes, which seemed to say I was a villain, a monster, yet I had been doing my exact duty, that of a faithful soldier in the cause of the Continental congress and freedom, while she, a woman, a girl, had presumed to turn from the things for which God had intended her and to meddle with war. I was more than vexed—I was angry, angry at her for attempting such a task and angry at myself for being forced into a situation so full of troubles.

On the right, in the fringe of woods a quarter of a mile away, the last rifle shot had been fired, and its echo was speeding across the far hills. The powder flashed no more, and the smoke rose in lazy coils over the ground on which men had fought and some had died. The victors, the captured detail with them, were riding away. I almost fancied I could hear the beat of their horses' hoofs, and the dead, I knew, lay with their faces upturned to the sun, waiting there until the last trump called to them to rise again. And here was I, an atom, left in the drift of the armies, cut off from my comrades and alone with this girl.

The horses shifted about uneasily, stamped their feet, and once mine raised his head and neighed, as if in truth he heard the beating hoofs of the galloping detachment. He knew that his comrades, too, were leaving him, though I cannot say that it was a desertion intended by either horse or man.

The girl's look of reproach turned to one of inquiry. She sat on a log, her little riding whip hanging idly in her hand. For the first time I took note of her face—the delicate but firm molding of each feature; the clear depths of her dark, blue eyes; the bronze gold of her hair, clustering in tiny curls around her forehead; the rose red of her cheeks, like a flush; her lithe, strong, young figure. Why is it that when God wishes to make women especially wicked and troublesome he makes them beautiful?

"Well, you rebel," she said, "when do you purpose to set me free?"

"When you give your word of honor that you will tell Cornwallis nothing about the strength of Morgan's forces and our present movements."

"That I will not do."

"Then you remain my prisoner."

Yet I would have been a fool even to have taken her word of honor. What woman has any regard for the truth in military matters? If she could find a chance, she would certainly give information that would bring Cornwallis, as well as Tarleton, on Morgan.

"I think that it is enough for Englishmen themselves to fight us without sending their daughters also against us," I said.

"My father did not send me," she said quickly. "I came of my own accord."

"So much the worse," I replied.

But nothing was to be gained by standing there and talking. Besides, it is never well for a soldier to dispute with his prisoner. It argues an insufficiency for his position. A captor should bear himself with dignity and reserve. I would show my quality.

I untied the horses and led them to the log on which she was sitting.

"Get up!" I said curtly and in a tone of command.

The natural rose flush of her cheeks deepened a little.

"You speak as if you were my master," she said.

"That is just what I am—for the present," I replied. "Mount your horse at once."

She gave me a sidewise look from eyes that flashed, but she stood upon the log.

"This log is too low, and the saddle is too high," she said.

I stepped forward and held out my hand to assist her.

"Don't touch me, you rebel!" she cried and leaped lightly into the saddle.

I felt hurt.

"I wish you wouldn't call me a rebel," I said.

"Why?"

"It's impolite."

"But it's true."

"Well, perhaps it is in a way, and in a way, too, I am proud of it. Are you proud of your king?"

"Yes."

"It doesn't take much to arouse English pride."

"You will think more of him when the war is over. It will pay you to do so."

"Meanwhile we will wait until then."

"What do you purpose to do with me—keep me a prisoner?"

"It is my misfortune."

"The courtesy of a rebel."

"I shall take you to General Morgan."

"Then Tarleton will rescue me. Your Morgan cannot stand before him."

I was afraid that she spoke the truth. We were outnumbered, and besides more than half our force was raw militia. The odds were great against us, and knowing it I did not reply to her taunt.

While we were talking she sat in the saddle with the easy seat of a good horsewoman. I held my horse loosely by the bridle. She was twiddling the whip in her hands. Suddenly she leaned over and lashed my horse across the eyes with her whip. The blow was given with all her might, and the startled horse reared, jerked the bridle out of my hand and ran away.

"Goodby, Mr. Rebel!" she shouted, and drawing her whip across her own horse galloped off in the opposite direction.

I believe I swore. I was angry and alarmed, too, for this girl, with her messages and accurate news about us, was a formidable enemy, escaped, and might cause the destruction of the entire army of the south and the loss of all the southern colonies. I drew a pistol, it being my idea to kill the horse, but it was a shot that I could not risk. I thrust the pistol back in my pocket and ran after my horse. He was 30 or 40 yards away, half mad with rage and pain, his bridle swinging beside him.

I am a very good runner, but I do not claim to be as swift as a horse. Nevertheless I made speed as I ran after him, and I whistled and shouted with a vigor that must have convinced him of my intentions. I looked back once, and the girl and the horse she rode were growing smaller as they sped over the desolate and unfenced fields. My need of a horse, too, was growing more pressing. Mounted, there was hope; afoot, there was none.

I whistled all the calls that a friendly and well treated horse should know and meantime did not neglect to run after him with the best speed that I could command. Presently he seemed to understand and to remember that I was not responsible for the blow. He slackened his pace, looked back over his shoulder at me and whinnied. I whistled encouragingly, he whinnied again, and, remembering who I was, his best friend, came to a full stop, for he was a most intelligent horse. In a half a minute I overtook him, leaped into the saddle and turned his head the other way.

"Now, old horse," I cried, "you can gallop, but you gallop my way."

I wore my spurs, and I gave him a touch of the steel. That was enough, for he was always ambitious and proud of his speed, and away we flew over the fields after the disappearing girl. She was a full quarter of a mile away, and her figure was growing dim on the horizon. Another quarter of a mile and she would be in the woods, where the concealment of the trees would enable her to elude my pursuit. Moreover, these English girls are often daring horsewomen, and even at the distance I could see that she rode like a trooper. But I knew the country, and she did not, and I hoped to secure from it some chance that would enable me to overtake her.

"SORRY FOR WHAT?" SHE ASKED.

I encouraged my horse. I did more than encourage—I appealed to his pride and his sense of gratitude. I reminded him how I had ridden him all the way from the Hudson when I came south with Greene; how I had tended him and cared for him and fed him, often when I was compelled to go hungry myself. I appealed to him now not to let that girl escape when so much depended on her capture, when I would be eternally disgraced, and he with me, if we permitted ourselves to be tricked and outwitted at such a time by one red cheeked English girl.

He was a sensible horse, and he understood. He said nothing, not even a little snort, but his stride lengthened, and the swift and regular beat of his hoofs on the turf was music.

"Good horse, Old Put, good lad!" I said. I had named him Put after Old Put, the famous old Connecticut general, because he was so reliable and steady. He shook his ears slightly as a sign that he would do his best for me, having no time to say more, and he ran a little faster. I kept a sharp watch for stones and holes in the ground, having no mind to risk a fall which might ruin all, and nursed my comrade's strength, for on land as well as sea a stern chase is a long one.

The figure of the girl and the horse she rode was growing larger, good proof that I was gaining, which was not enough, however, for I might continue to gain, and yet she could elude me in the woods unless I was close upon her when she reached them. Her long hair had fallen down and was streaming behind her like a ribbon of spray with the sunshine on it, but I felt like giving that yellow hair a jerk just then could I have put my hands upon it.

"Steady, Put!" I said to my faithful comrade. "Do you see that girl with the yellow hair? Yes? Well, note the horse that she is riding, a common troop horse, clumsy, ill bred, no pedigree. Are you going to let yourself be beaten by him?"

His ears wagged violently, and he ran a foot to the second faster. We struck a piece of beautiful turf, evidently an old field left to itself until it could recover its fertility, and with the soft grass deadening and easing his footfalls Old Put raced for life. I could almost count the yards that we gained, and still she was not in the forest. She had not looked back until then, and it was a hasty glance, followed by a quick lashing of her mount. I judged that she, too, had noticed the gain and would now be unmerciful to her horse. I was exultant, willing to boast of it, and I shared my feelings with Old Put.

"Notice that yellow haired girl again, Put," I said. "When we catch her this time, we will take care that she does not serve us such a trick again. If we cannot trust an Englishman, Put, how on earth can we put any faith in an English woman?"

Put had received a slight slash once from the saber of an Englishman who had offered to surrender to me and then tried to back out of it, and he knew what I meant. For the first time he uttered a slight snort, called one new muscle into play, and we steadily shortened the distance between us and the girl.

She would have got into the wood a few moments later, but she abruptly reined in her horse, turned him half about and galloped off to the left. I guessed the trouble at once. The heavy rains often wash great gullies in our South Carolina soil, and a kind providence, wishing to oblige me, had placed one of these in her way. It was equal to a gain of 200 feet without an effort, and I turned Old Put at once into the course she was taking.

"Don't you see, Put," I said, "that the Lord is on our side and she and that burnt brown cob of hers that has passed most of his life hitched to a sutler's wagon will be delivered into our hands?"

Old Put fairly neighed, his first real expression of triumph. He was as sure of the victory now as I was, and I had confidence in the judgment of my old comrade.

"Stop, stop!" I shouted to the girl. "If you don't stop, I'll shoot!"

I had a long barreled horse pistol, which I had drawn and was flourishing magnificently. I was within hearing though not shooting range, and I trusted that I would be able to frighten her into yielding.

But she did not stop. She had worn her whip into shreds, and thin red streams of blood zigzagged across the horse's sides, but she pounded on with the stump. I felt a genuine pity for her horse, hack though he was, but none for her.

CHAPTER II.

KEEPING A PRISONER.

No more gullies thrust themselves across the way, and she was within 20 feet of the wood. She took another hurried look at me, and seeing my rapid gain alarm appeared on her face. She drew a little toy pistol from the cloak she wore and leveled it at me, or at least that seemed to be her intention. I call it a toy pistol, because I, a full grown soldier, would have felt deep shame had I been caught with such a weapon in my possession. She pulled the trigger, and the bullet cut the uncomplaining air somewhere, but not in my neighborhood. This bombardment cost her at least 20 feet of gain, but she thrust the terrible weapon back in her cloak and galloped on, with Old Put thundering at her heels. Then she was into the wood, and I was not far behind, shouting to her to stop; that I would surely overtake her and she was merely wasting the breath of both our horses and our own. Still she paid no heed, guiding her horse between the trees and through the bushes with considerable skill.

But, seeing the wood thicken presently, I was tempted to laugh. It was obvious now that the end of the race had come and I was the winner. The wood became so dense, the bushes clustering in thickets and the vines interlacing from tree to tree, that it formed an impenetrable wall. What I had feared would help her had been my best ally.

She stopped short and sat stiffly on her horse, her back turned to me. I wondered if she would draw out that amazing pistol again and threaten me with it, but she made no such attempt, evidently having arrived at wisdom at last. She dropped the stump of her switch on the ground and kept the back of her head toward me. Some beams of sunshine came through the tall trees and gleamed across the long curls of tawny gold, tingeing them for the moment as if with fire.

I rode up by her side, and then, as she seemed to reprove me, I asked Old Put to take me around in front of her. There I could see her face. It was pale, sad and reproachful, and a tear ran down either cheek. For the moment I felt a little pity for her despite her perverse nature and all the trouble she had given me.

"I am sorry I have to do this," I said.

"Sorry for what?" she asked.

I saw that I had made a mistake. One should always be polite to a woman, but never apologetic.

"That I had to overtake you," I said.

"Yours is the better horse," she said, wiping away the tears with an angry little brush of the hand. "I like to ride, and I always enjoy a good race. That was the reason I challenged you to it,

Red Lake Falls Gazette.

—BY—

PHIL. A. KAUFER.

Published weekly. Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Red Lake Falls.

☞ All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in one or before Tuesday 6 p. m.

Although eighty-two years old this summer, Mrs. H. P. VanCleve, "the first white baby born in the Northwest," is still vigorous of mind and actively interested in the world's affairs. She lives in Minneapolis. Her life-story as told in The Ladies' Home Journal for August, is a picturesque and exciting one. Born at Fort Crawford, Wisconsin, on July 1, 1819, the daughter of one regular army officer and the widow of another, she passed through all the trials, hardships and adventures of military and pioneer life on the frontier, and although she has spent most of her later years in cities, her experiences have still been of a varied and unusual character. Her golden wedding anniversary was celebrated more than fifteen years ago.

The Crookston Times has gone and done it—put several thousand dollars more into the plant, run out the old dilapidated Babcock that had done duty these many years, and put in its place a new Scott Fast Newspaper press, besides a folder that will turn out the papers as fast as the press runs, a new Standard Babcock cylinder for the job department, a Pearl card press, new binding machinery, and on top of all a new dress and a special telegraphic service. The Gazette congratulates The Times. The innovation emphazises the development of northwestern Minnesota and of Crookston, its metropolis, while adding another testimonial to the ability of Bro. McKenzie as a newspaper man.

G. E. Merrill, of Fisher, has for several years been experimenting on an egg preserver, and now believes he has it as near perfect as can be. Last year he preserved twenty-three hundred dozen eggs and during the winter found a ready sale for them and did not loose an egg. Up to the present time this year he has pickled over six thousand dozen eggs ready for the coming winter's trade, and is not through yet.

Those who have difficulty in remembering the names of the nine judges of the U. S. supreme court, will be aided by reference to the fact that three bear names of colors—Brown, White, and Gray; while one is a Brewer, another Fuller (the chief justice,) Shiras, McKenna, Peckham and Harlan are the only remaining ones to memorize.

Death of Mrs. Philip Demarais.

The death of Mrs. Philip Demarais occured Tuesday morning at her home on the farm three miles south of the city, quick consumption having been the immediate cause of her death. Besides a husband, father, and other relatives she leaves two children, the elder having but five years of age. Mr and Mrs. Desmarais were married in 1895 and had four children, of which two are dead. Funeral services were conducted at St. Joseph's church, where a requiem mass was read. The remains were interred in the Ridge cemetery, west of the city.

LITERARY NOTES.

When The Cosmopolitan, in its April number, published an essay, at once clever and philosophic on "The Ideal Wife," a demand was created for a paper on "The Ideal Husband" by the same author—Lavinia Hart. The August Cosmopolitan contains an essay on this subject—on which few people agree—which is certain not only to prove widely interesting, but to cause lively discussion. In the same number Mrs. Van Renesselaer Cruger (Julien Gordon) tells the story of the life of the French wife with all its tragic commonplace narrowness. "The woman of small capacity puts up with, and, perhaps, does much toward maintaining present conditions," says the author, "but there are women of brains who die at an early age of no disease known to doctors, but simply from utter weariness."

The Woman's Home Companion for August is a fiction number. It contains five interesting short stories: "An Idyl of Central Park," by Brander Matthews; "Her Grace of Stoke Pogis," by Elizabeth O. Cuppy; "The Man From Mars," by Katharine Holland Brown; "The Sorrows of Jim Jamphry," by Minnie Thomas Boyce; "After Many Days," by Frederick M. Smith. The Children's Page gives one of Margaret Johnson's delightful illustrated poems, and a short fairy-story. Two notable features are a double page illustrating famous beaches, and "The Lady Warwick School for Women Farmers." The House-hold and Fashion Departments are even better than those of the preceding months. The cover design is made from a picture by the German artist Kock. Published by The Crowell & Kirkpatrick Co., Springfield, Ohio; one dollar a year; ten cents a copy; sample copy free.

Evidently no effort has been spared to make The Ladies' Home Journal for August a positive boon to its readers during these warm midsummer days. Its light, readable articles, bright stories, clever poems, charming music, and numerous beautiful illustrations afford the easiest and pleasantest kind of entertainment for leisure hours. Enchanting views of the lovely scenery in the Engadine Valley and among the Swiss and Italian lakes, as well as such delightful articles as "The Singing Village of Germany" and "What Girl-Life in Italy Means," allure the thoughts to foreign lands, while there are timely suggestions about the "The Picnic Basket," Keeping a House Cool in the Dog-Days," and "Sea-Side Toys and How to Make Them." Other thoroughly interesting contributions are "The First White Baby Born in the Northwest," "My Boarding-School for Girls," and the usual serial and department articles. By The Curtis Publishing Company, Philadephia. One dollar a year; ten cents a copy.

far as securing hits went. He had the Indians in his staff all the time, and had them biting after drops that would actually strike in front of the base. The fact was the Thief River batters could not tell within three feet of where the ball was coming. They simply made a guess and in all but two cases the guess was pretty poor. Two hits were all the Indians could gather from Olson and these came so far apart that they could hardly be counted. Besides this Olson struck out 17 of the Thief River batters, which is a pretty good record for an amateur pitcher. Especially when it is compared with that of "Dad" Clark, against whom he was pitching and who poses as a professional. Clarke was hit safely 12 times and struck out but 13 men as compared to Olson's record.

The redeeming features of the Indian's game in the afternoon was their fast work in the field. But this game as well as the morning's game showed the Indians to be outclassed by the Selects, and that they had got in altogether too fast company.

The score:—

Selects	4 0 0 1 1 0 0 0 0—	6	12	6

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev. A. A. Power, of Emperia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and he said, 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told him to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured." For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

Their Secret is Out.

It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Stomach and Liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50c at W. A. Gothier-Robillard.

One of the most felicitous of the many matrimonial events of the week occurred Sunday at St. Joseph's church at 4 o'clock p. m., when Mr. Henry Gothier of Terrebonne led to the altar Miss Olivine Robillard, of this city, the Rev. E. Fayolle tieing the knot. The newly wedded couple returned to Terrebonne the same afternoon. We extend our hearty good wishes.

Fournier-Langlois.

A wedding was celebrated last Sunday at Terrebonne, the contracting parties being Mr. Alex Fournier, of Terrebonne, and Miss Antonin Langlois, of this city. The ceremony took place at the church of St. Anthony, at 5 o'clock p. m., Rev. Father P. Pujoe officiating. The guests were served a sumptuous supper under the parental roof of the groom. Mr. Fournier is a young and well-to-do farmer of Terrebonne, where he has resided for years. The charming bride is a sister of Mrs. A. W. Krueger of this city. The Gazette extends its blessing.

Judge Knight Officiates at a Marriage Ceremony.

This has been one of the busiest weeks on record for the Judge of Probate. As it has also been a great matrimonial week for this town, he did not escape the honor of tieing the mystical knot when Mr. Carl Erickson and Miss Lizzie Wildenoe were united. The ceremony in which Judge Knight officiated took place at 10:30 a. m. last Monday, the witnesses being Joseph Perreault and Chas. Roudette.

The couple will continue in the realm of matrimony at Lake Pleasant. Long life and happiness are the wishes we extend.

Savard-Lizotte.

A wedding occurred last Tuesday at Louisville, when Mr. John Savard and Miss Elise Lizotte were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. The ceremony took place about 10:30 a.m., Rev. Fr. Thellion officiating. Only relatives were present to celebrate the occasion. Miss Alvina Lizotte acted as bridesmaid and Mr. Docite Robillard as best man. Those from Red Lake Falls were T. Robillard, A. Pouliot, and Jack Lagacy. Both parties are well known in this city. Miss Lizotte having been engaged as clerk in different stores here. Mr. Savard has spent many of the cold months as cook in the lumber camps. The excursion to Winnipeg was made their wedding trip. A house and lot has been purchased on Champagne av., and here they will make their future home. May their path be strewn with roses.

HINTS FOR FARMERS

Corn and Cob Meal.

There has been much controversy for many years in regard to the policy of grinding the cob with the corn for feeding purposes, practical farmers who grow and feed out their corn usually favoring the practice, while theorists and those who thought it cheaper to buy corn than to grow asserted that the cob had no feeding value. The Kansas station experimented in this question for two years, feeding it to various animals, with the result that they found equal weights of the corn and cob meal would produce better results than the corn alone. As a bushel of corn is supposed to weight 70 pounds when well cured, of which 56 pounds is grain and 14 pounds is cob, it follows that by grinding them together the value of the meal is 20 per cent more than the meal from the grain alone would be. In their trials the corn and cob were ground very fine to insure more thorough digestion. The cost of grinding the cob does not greatly exceed if it equaled the cost of shelling the corn. When the ears are put in with the stalk in the silo, the cob and the fiber of the stalk are so softened by heating that the same object is attained and the whole well digested, so that it has more value than when the best ears are picked off and shelled and the cornmeal given with the ensilage.

Salt and Lime For Sour Soils.

Gardeners use both salt and lime with considerable success on soils of a certain character. Sometimes both of these are used to excess, and if they do not actually injure the soil they do no good and cost considerable. But where the soil is sour, heavy and difficult to work an application of either salt or lime proves beneficial. Salt has several good results. It will under certain conditions where the plant food in the earth is heavy tend to free it so that the crops can utilize it more readily. Lime likewise has its value not so much as a fertilizing agent as a corrector of abnormal conditions. It tends to sweeten the sour soil, to release plant food and to accumulate moisture and retain it in the soil.

Decayed Vegetables.

Do not try to dispose of the partially decayed vegetables in the cellar by feeding them to the cows. It is poor economy. They are sure to impart a taint to the milk and to injure the butter. And there is another place where they should not go, and that is to the manure heap, unless it is to be so composted that the vegetables themselves will decay and the fungus or mold that forms during the decay will have been entirely destroyed. But the use of them for feeding milk cows is the most common method of disposing of them, and the very worst method too.

Pruning Tomatoes.

Southern growers of tomatoes for northern markets practice a peculiar system of pruning. All the lateral branches are pinched out as soon as they appear, thus making a vine of a single upright stem. When three or four clusters of fruit have set, the top of the vine is also pinched out, thus stopping the growth entirely. It is claimed for this rather drastic treatment that it makes larger and earlier fruit and that it tends to make the crop mature all at once.

Pure Water For Cattle.

Many pastures have watering places for the cows which do not furnish pure water. They are the drainings of swamps filled with decaying vegetable matter, nearly stagnant and made more foul by the excrements of the animals that visit them and stand in them. Such places should be abolished and good water supplied from wells, cisterns or brooks.

There is a great difference between using the teams, machinery and men which are the necessary equipment of every good farm to till ten acres of corn and paying out the $300 the equivalent of what such a crop would cost.

VICTORY FOR STATE

MINNEAPOLIS AND ST. LOUIS ROAD LOSES ITS EARNINGS TAX CASE.

Former Ramsey County Official Under Arrest—Serious Runaway at a Duluth Funeral—Move to Secure the Opening of Cass Lake Reservation. General News of the State.

St. Paul, July 27.—An order has been filed by Judge Lewis sustaining the defendant's demurrer to the amended complaint in the case of the Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad company vs. August T. Kuerner, as state treasurer.

The case involves an important principle, the action being brought to restrain the state from collecting a 3 per cent gross earnings tax on a short line or branch feeder leading to New Ulm and which was purchased by the plaintiffs.

Under its franchise the New Ulm road was to pay only 1 per cent of its earnings up to a certain time; but when it was absorbed or purchased by the St. Louis road it was taxed on a basis of 3 per cent, the same as the other property of the main road. Injunction proceedings were brought by the road to restrain the state from collecting the money and the demurrer to the complaint was sustained. The complaint was then amended, and, according to the order of Judge Lewis, the state gains a second victory.

FALSE REFUNDING ORDERS.

Former Deputy Auditor Under Arrest at St. Paul.

St. Paul, July 22.—Ex-Deputy Auditor W. B. Bourne was arrested at his home near Rosemount on a warrant charging him with uttering a forged and false refunding order on the county treasurer for $443 in favor of Frank Underwood.

It is alleged the offense was committed during the time Bourne was a deputy in the office under ex-County Auditor Sullivan. Bourne was arraigned in the police court during the morning and his case continued.

W. R. Johnson, county auditor, shortly after Bourne's arraignment, swore to another complaint against the ex-deputy, which charges him with falsely issuing to E. J. Trowbridge, March 30, 1899, an order on the county treasury for $1,443.52.

The order was for refunding taxes of 1891, and was unauthorized and false, according to the complaint.

It is alleged that Bourne is responsible for illegal refundments amounting to $15,000.

RUNAWAY AT A FUNERAL.

Driver Fatally Hurt but the Others Escaped.

Duluth, July 25.—While returning from the funeral of their father two sisters and two brothers had a narrow escape from death or serious injury through the running away of the horses drawing the carriage in which they were riding. The driver is fatally hurt, three broken ribs having penetrated his lungs.

The horses started when the driver was arranging the harness, and, knocking him down, pulled the heavy wheels over his chest.

George Tvedt, one of the brothers, seeing that the reins were fastened to the driver's box, managed to climb to the seat while the horses were running at break neck pace. The animals kept in the straight road, and, after running about a mile, Tvedt was able to gain control of them.

ONE MAY DIE.

Duluth Street Car Plunges Off a Thirty-Foot Trestle.

Duluth, July 30.—A West Duluth street car jumped the track and plunged off a 30-foot trestle in the west end of the city early in the morning, with the result that Louis Felix, a laborer, one of the passengers, lies at St. Mary's hospital unconscious, with several wounds in his head, and will probably die. Fortunately, there were only three passengers in the car besides the operators. All were more or less bruised, but none seriously. The car struck on its front end in a swamp and stood on end. The motorman was in front at the brake, but beyond a few painful bruises, was uninjured.

WANT CONGRESS TO ACT.

Cass Lake and Walker Anxious That Reservation Be Opened.

Cass Lake, Minn., July 30.—The people who are most interested in the opening of the Chippewa Indian reservation are commencing to move in earnest toward the consummation of their wishes and what they consider their rights. A joint session of the Commercial club of Cass Lake and the Industrial association of Walker was held at Strawbridge hall, Cass Lake, at which time resolutions to this end were adopted.

Will Cost a Million Dollars.

Milwaukee, July 26.—The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul company has begun important improvements on its River division, which, before completed, will cost the company more than $1,000,000. This extensive work lies between St. Paul and La Crosse and consists chiefly in track betterment, such as straightening curves and reducing grades, as was done on the La Crosse division between this city and La Crosse during the past two years.

GRAIN CROP IS SAFE.

Prolonged Heat Does Little Damage in the Northwest.

St. Paul, July 25.—Reports of the most encouraging nature have been received from the crops all over the Northwest. Although the past week has been the hottest in the history of the weather bureau of this section small and large grain has suffered very little, and in most cases it has been benefitted. Only on sandy soil, where the bottom is shallow, has there been any material damage. And from many sections the report comes that not even on this kind of land has the grain crop been injured. This is most remarkable and portends general prosperity for the farmers of the Northwest this year.

Corn has not only not been damaged by the excessive heat, but its growth has been quickened and the kernels enlarged. While the Northwest is not the leading corn section of the country it is more than certain now that a large yield will be had, and in view of the fact that in many of the best corn producing states of the Union the crop is an utter failure corn raisers in the Northwest will be able to count on good prices for their product.

DULUTH'S BIG TIMBER DEAL.

A Million Dollars Paid for 170,000,000 Feet of Pine.

Duluth, July 30.—One of the largest timber deals that has been made in Northern Minnesota in many years has just been completed. Cook and Turrish of Duluth and their associates transfer to the Brooks Timber company 170,000,000 feet of pine in St. Louis and Lake counties for a consideration of $1,000,000 in round numbers. The Brooks Timber company is the pine corporation of the Brooks-Scanlon Lumber company and the Scanlon-Gipson Lumber company.

The pine that has just been acquired by the Brooks Timber company will be sawed at Cloquet in the new sawmill of the Brooks-Scanlon company, which will be completed about Sept. 1. It will be necessary for the company to build a logging road 35 miles long to deliver the pine to the mill. The bulk of the timber is in St. Louis county. The Brooks-Scanlon company now owns about 450,000,000 feet of pine tributary to this mill.

MAY FEEL STRIKE.

Steel War Threatens to Affect Business of Great Lakes.

Duluth, July 24.—There is some speculation in Duluth as to the effect that the great steel strike will have here. It is quite generally conceded that if the strike is prolonged to a considerable extent its effect will be felt at the head of the lakes very decidedly. A tie-up of the ore-consuming concerns means a decrease in the demand for ore, and that means that an entirely new recast of the estimates of the season's lake business will be necessary. Besides a decrease in the amount of ore shipped out of Duluth it means a decrease in the amount of ore to be mined, and that in turn means that many of the miners on the ranges may be thrown out of employment temporarily. It all depends upon the duration of the strike, for if it is settled speedily the effect here will be hardly noticeable.

BENEFIT TO FARMERS.

Copious Rains Fall in Sections of the Northwest.

St. Paul, July 26.—Copious rains visited the Northwest Thursday, especially Minnesota and portions of Wisconsin and Iowa. In some sections hail, wind and lightning accompanied the downfall, not only causing several deaths but doing much damage to farm buildings and injuring the crops at places. Lightning struck many buildings, setting fire to them and resulting in much loss to farmers. Naturally the rain was welcome as there was great need of moisture. The change of atmosphere and the heavy downfall of rain did thousands of dollars worth of good to the crops and the farmers, being benefited thereby, are jubilant.

LOOT FROM PEKING.

Minneapolis Firm to Be Investigated by the Government.

Washington, July 27.—Information has reached the department of justice that there are displayed in a store window in Minneapolis a number of articles bearing a card to the effect that they were taken at the sacking of Peking and that they are for sale. The department of justice has asked the co-operation of the treasury department in ascertaining the history of these articles, by whom brought into the country and whether rightfully in his possession, and, incidentally, whether the customs duties on them have been paid. Special agents of the treasury department have been instructed accordingly.

Positions for the Youngers.

St. Paul, July 24.—Thomas Coleman Younger and James Harden Younger have begun life anew as commercial travelers, after nearly 25 years behind prison bars. Separate contracts were drawn up by which a St. Paul tombstone company engages with the state through Warden Wolfer of the state prison, to employ the men to sell tombstones at $60 a month, in addition to all expenses and lodging.

Struck on the Head With a Chain.

Referring to the drought in Kansas, a popular Swedish populist paper seems to be in darkness as to the reason why "Prestakalle" can't ask McKinley for rain. This, although flourished in the press, we can not regard as anything but silly child-talk, but, nevertheless, it seems by that as if they regard our president an abler man than they have yet made Bryan in their political campaigns.

Fire at Thief River Falls.

Thief River Falls, Aug. 6.—Fire caused by a spark from the borer, broke out in a large barn of the Thief River Falls Lumber company at this place this morning and raged fiercely for several hours. The structure was entirely destroyed together with a large quantity of hay. The barn contained sixty head of horses which were all rescued. The barn is located directly across the street from Weiner's confectionery store and Olson's boarding house, both of which were badly damaged. The wooden approach to the iron bridge across the river was entirely destroyed. After the barn was consumed the fire spread to the adjacent piles of lumber, several of which were burned. The city fire department made every effort to extinguish the fire, but the engine failed to work and the hot fire destroyed three lines of hose. Mill hands turned out and with the aid of the hose from the mill succeeded in saving considerable property. City's loss on the approach will be $500 and it will be several days before traffic can be resumed. The lumber company places its loss at $6,000.

A THOUSAND MILES AT SEA.

In Several Parts of the Earth Ships Can Get That Far from Land.

The question has been asked, is it possible to sail 1,000 miles from land? This can be done at several points. By leaving San Francisco and sailing northwestward into the North Pacific, a spot is reached where there is no land—not even an islet—for 1,000 miles in any direction. So, too, sailing from the southern point of Kamtchatka, southeastward, ships reach a point equally distant from land of any kind, the nearest to the north being the Aleutian islands, and to the south the outlying members of the Sandwich group. In the southern Indian ocean it is possible to sail 1,000 miles out from the southern points of Australia and New Zealand and still be as far from any other land, and the same may be done in a westerly direction from Cape Horn. Indeed, from this point a much longer distance may be reached, for the southern Pacific, between the Horn and New Zealand, covers a space of 80 degrees of longitude and 40 of latitude of absolutely unbroken sea, making its central point over 1,200 miles from anywhere.

HEARD IN LONDON.

London is to have an automatic ham sandwich machine.

The British museum library has 32 miles of bookshelves.

In 1880 there were about 1,600 hansoms in London. There are now over 7,000.

Nine hundred and sixty thousand people enter London every day from the suburbs.

Sixteen solicitors were struck off the rolls in four days in London for dishonesty.

Sir Wolfe Barry estimates the loss caused by the congestion of London streets at £2,154,000 a year.

The custom of attending religious services in evening dress is said to be gaining in popularity among London's smart society.

The population of London is now greater than that of Ireland, yet London has only about half the number of representatives in parliament enjoyed by Ireland.

WILL WAIT.

THE WYLIE CHEESE FACTORY WILL NOT RUN THIS YEAR.

Although the building has been completed for some time, with the machinery all in place, the Wylie Dairy Association has not been able to secure a cheese maker, and now the directors deem it rather late to start, and will wait until next spring. In the meantime the farmers in the vicinity can prepare their herds by the addition of good milch cows, and have everything in readiness to begin in tip topshape in the spring. Its success will thus be assured. The Wylie creamery is another adjunct to the fast growing creamery industry, that will have much to do with advancing the interests of the farmers of Red Lake county.

Vic's Letter.

Calamba, P. I., June 30, 1901.

EDITOR GAZETTE:

As I have a few idle moments to myself I will use them in writing to the readers of the Gazette.

Lately things have been pretty lively around here. On the 24th day of June Gen. Callies, the noted French general who has been siding with the insurgents' cause, surrendered at Santa Cruz, a short distance from here. Gen. Cailles surrendered with some 500 arms, 600 soldiers, four cannons and one deserter from the American army by the name of Meking, a deserter from the 37th U. S. V. and formerly from the 18th U. S. I. has been with the insurgents for nearly a year, and in all probability is accountable for the lives of several of our soldiers. Still the Manilla paper says he will be discharged without trial. Gen. Cailles will be a candidate for the governorship of the province of La Laguna.

I am again transferred—this time to Co. D 1st Battalion Engineers as a corporal which now gives me the pay of $29.80. I will remain on duty where I am for the present. I expect that I will join my company within the next few weeks. It's expected by most all men that we will be going back to the United States in a short time.

I was down to Manila and saw Bill Beautrow, but I could not see Simeon Paul.

The troops of the Fourth are all making arrangements to leave for the United States in July. I expect that Will Beautrow will attempt to be transferred to the corps of engineers, but whether he will be as successful as I was I do not know, but I fear not for his application will have to be passed from one officer to another by telegraph and by cablegram to Washington.

The 24th day of June was celebrated in great style in this town. The natives obtained permission to raise a racket all night for three days, that is the day previous and the day following the "festa" of the town—St. John's Day. Three bands were in attendance, which furnished music each day for almost the whole 24 hours. Each night a procession was made with nice floats and most everybody carried a lighted candle. Each evening after the procession a theatrical performance was given in open air. The language was Spanish. The natives are certainly entertainers in their way. Well this is all for this time. I will write on the Fourth again.

I am as ever,
"VIC."

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev. A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and he said, 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told him to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured." For sale by W. A. Schreiter.

GREAT BRICK.

SCHMITZ BROS. HAVE STRUCK A REAL KLONDYKE IN THEIRS.

TURNED OUT A FINE KILN OF 153,000 BRICK THIS WEEK.

The firm of Schmitz Bros. is making a record this summer, not so much in the number of brick being manufactured, as in the quality of the finished product. Thursday they opened the last kiln of 153,000 and these turned out to be the finest ever, which is saying a good deal, since their product is of the finest. In point of color, weight and temper, nothing finer could be found outside of the St. Louis fire brick, and the colored imported pressed brick.

Schmitz Bros. receive $6.00 and $7.00 per thousand for their brick. They have made over half a million this year and find for it a ready sale.

WILL BE A HUMMER.

RED LAKE FALLS ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. MAKING IMPROVEMENTS.

By September first the Red Lake Falls Electric Light Company expect to have their magnificent new plant in operation. A new 200 horse power steam engine is now being put in place on a stone and brick foundation which has just been completed and a new dynamo is already in place. It is calculated that this dynamo will be sufficient for use until Red Lake Falls is a city of 10,000 inhabitants or more, and Hon. Marcus Johnson, president of the company, has abundant faith that many years will not elapse until such a consummation.

To give an idea of the capacity of the dynamo,—that of the Crookston Water Power and Light Co. is 150 kilo-watts while ours is 180 kilo-watts. The all night service will be put on Sept. 1st, to continue without interruption.

Their Secret is Out.

All Sadieville, Ky., was curious to learn the cause of the vast improvement in the health of Mrs. S. P. Whittaker, who had for a long time endured untold suffering from a chronic bronchial trouble. "It is all due to Dr. King's New Discovery," writes her husband. "It completely cured her and also cured our little grand daughter of a severe attack of Whooping Cough." It positively cures Coughs, Colds, LaGrippe, Bronchitis, all Throat and Lung troubles. Guaranteed bottles 50c and $1.00. Trial bottles free at W. A. Schreiter's drug store.

A Parisian who placed a feeder in front of his automobile was so annoyed by small boys falling into the net for a free ride that he was obliged to remove the life-saving device.

H. H. Hilton, of the Royal Liverpool Golf club, who recently won the championship of Britain, is regarded as a wonder in golfing. According to Harry Vardon, he is the best amateur the world ever saw, and many are prepared to go farther than that and proclaim him the most finished exponent of the game, either professional or amateur.

Astounded The Editor:

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bennettsville, S. C., was once immensely surprised. "Through long suffering from Dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength or vigor and suffered great distress from her stomach, but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well, can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Stomach and Liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50c at W. A. Schreiter's.

OF COURSE

Northern Minnesota is coming to the front as a dairy country. For the first time on record a prize has been taken by the Red River valley. The prize winner lives at Terrebonne, Red Lake county, and his name is H. Clement. In the monthly state scoring contest Clement's cheese exhibit was marked first out of 13 contestants. Clement is a Canadian who recently came to Minnesota and began making cheese at Terrebonne about June 1.

though I did not know you good horse."

This was a new view of the case, but I had a thought, or, rather, a reflection.

"It was a good race," I said, "but wasn't that a false start?"

"How so?"

"Didn't you take an advantage?"

"I was entitled to it. I am a woman."

"So women expect to carry that rule even into warfare?"

"Certainly."

I was glad that I had never been forced to wage war with a woman before and hoped never to meet the necessity again. One likes to stick to the rules in military matters, and then he has some idea what to expect.

"The horses are very tired," I said.

"They look like it," said she.

The poor animals were panting, and their coats were damp. I took the reins of her horse from her hand and held them firmly in mine.

"What are you going to do?" she asked.

"I think I'd better hold the reins of both," I said. "Will you please dismount?"

I set her a good example by jumping down myself. She could not say that the prisoner was compelled to walk while the captor rode. I stepped forward to assist her, but again she refused my help and sprang to the ground unassisted.

Old Put gazed angrily at the girl who had struck him. Then he snorted with triumph and looked contemptuously at the horse at his side. The latter seemed to be ashamed of himself, and his attitude was apologetic, but he had done his best and therefore should not have been blamed.

"Come," I said, "we will get out of this wood and walk back across the fields. Walk by my side. I will watch you, as I do not want any more treachery."

I spoke with great sternness, as the mite of pity I felt when I saw the tears had gone. She obeyed with surprising meekness and walked beside me, while I led the horses, holding both bridles in one hand. I was glad that I had been so sharp with her, and I saw now it was the proper way with rebellious women. A man has only to show toward them a stern, unyielding temper, and they submit at once. She was crushed, and again that mite of pity rose up in my breast, for nearly always we feel a trace of sympathy for those whom we have vanquished.

Her head drooped, there was a faint appeal in her eyes, and her walk showed weariness. She seemed to have forgotten that her hair was loose down her back, for she let it hang in long curls of gold, burnished where the sunshine fell upon it, dark in the shadow.

The yellow of the sun was deepening into red, a sign that the afternoon was waning, and I was anxious about the future, for which, like a good soldier, I felt it my duty to provide. She must have seen the care in my face, for she asked:

"Are you thinking how we shall reach General Morgan?"

"General Morgan or some one else."

"Is it far to his camp?"

"I cannot say. I do not know where he is. The American camp just now is of a shifting character."

"To keep out of Tarleton's way, I suppose?"

"Either that or to find him."

Then she seemed to repent of her gibe at our running away from the British.

"But General Morgan is a brave man, I have heard," she said.

That warmed my heart.

"He is a brave man," I said, "and, what is more, he is a fine soldier and general."

"What a pity he is not on the right side!"

"Let's not quarrel about that again."

I thought I could afford to be generous. My situation was so superior to hers.

After that we walked along in silence for several minutes. The red tint of the sun deepened; faint shadows appeared in the blue velvet of the sky.

"I want to ask you one question," she said presently.

"There is nothing to prevent your asking it."

"But I want an answer, direct and correct."

"If it does not interfere with the progress of the campaign."

"I don't think it will do that."

"What is it?"

"What is your name?"

I laughed. It had never occurred to me before to tell her.

"It is true," I said, "that we have not had an introduction, though we are seeing a good deal of each other's society, but it is not too late. My name is Philip Marcel."

"Why, that sounds like French, and I thought you were an American."

"Both are true. I am an American, and the name Marcel used to be French. I am of French descent partly, and I may have British blood, too, though I shall not boast of it. There are many of us in South Carolina."

"But I thought you were northern. You said you had been serving in the northern army of the rebels"—

"The patriots."

"Well, the patriots, then, under Mr Washington."

"General Washington!"

"Well, General Washington."

"Yes, I have been serving in the northern army of the patriots under General Washington, but he has sent me south with General Greene and the others, mostly southerners themselves, to redeem this part of the country from the British raiders. But I am a South Carolinian."

She relapsed into silence again, and I imitated her example. I had enough of importance anyhow to think about without talking to a girl, an enemy, but presently I recollected.

"Pardon me," I said, "but you have forgotten something too."

"What is it?"

"You have not told me your name."

"That is true, and the introduction cannot be complete until I do."

"Certainly not."

"My name is Howard."

"Howard! What Howard?"

"Julia Howard. My father is John Sinclair Howard, major in Tarleton's legion. I was born in Devonshire, England, and I am here with my father, having nobody else to look after me, until such time as these rebellious colonies are put down and restored in their allegiance to their lawful sovereign, George III, king of England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, God bless him!"

I thought that God could find something better to do than to waste his time blessing King George, a fat German blockhead, but I kept the thought to myself just then.

"Then, mark my words, Miss Julia Howard of Devonshire, England," I said, "you have come here to stay."

"I don't believe it."

"It is a prediction; it will come true."

Her look was full of unbelief, and we relapsed into silence again. The shadows grew in the sky. The sun blazed like fire, and my old trouble about the future came back.

The horses ceased to pant and walked now with springy steps, their weariness gone. Old Put thrust his nose under my arm and whinnied gently. He was talking in the language that we two understood. I rubbed his soft nose.

"Yes, old fellow," I said to him, "you have done your duty well, as you always do. We'll stop soon, and then I'll find you something to eat."

He whinnied again and rubbed his nose on my sleeve, for he understood.

"He looks like a good horse," said the girl.

"Never better," I replied and with emphasis.

"I like a good horse," she said.

"So do I. That's the reason I'm so fond of Old Put."

"I wonder if he would be as friendly with me?"

"I don't know. He usually likes old friends best, but still Old Put is a horse of fine taste."

Her evident admiration of Old Put appealed to me, and I thought I would give her the little compliment. Women like such things, and again I felt as if I could afford to be generous.

She put her hand upon his nose and stroked it gently. It was a white, well shaped hand, with pretty tapering fingers. Old Put must have admired it. He assisted in the rubbing task, swaying his nose gently to and fro, and he whinnied once softly as he did when he was talking to me. He seemed to have forgotten the blow she had given him.

"See," she said triumphantly. "He has found a new friend, a good friend, and he knows it. He is almost as fond of me as he is of you."

I was surprised, greatly surprised. Heretofore Old Put had always proved himself to be an excellent judge of character, and now he was putting his trust in this English girl, who had shown herself to be unworthy of any trust whatever. Poor Old Put! Another masculine dupe! He was growing old; he was falling into his dotage. I felt a certain sadness at these signs of mental decay in my faithful horse. But they marched on, his silky nose pressed closely against her arm, and meanwhile the sun was sinking and the shadows were deepening and lengthening.

"I do not think it is necessary for us to walk any more," I said. "The horses are now thoroughly rested from their race and are willing to do their part, which is to carry us."

She looked at her ugly brown hack in some dismay.

"He's such a rough traveler I believe I'd rather walk," she said.

He certainly had a most irregular, jumping kind of gait, which would make him an unpleasant mount for anybody, but there seemed to be no recourse. Horses were not running loose around us for me to catch.

"But we can't help it," I said. "We can ride slowly, in a walk. If he misbehaves, use that switch you have picked up."

She walked steadily on.

"Now, if he were like this one," she said, stroking Old Put's nose, "I would be glad to ride again."

"Suppose I change the saddles, then," I said, "and let you ride Old Put?"

It was a great concession for me to make, but her appreciation of my horse had touched me for the moment.

"Do you think he would let me?" she said, looking at Old Put doubtfully and timidly.

Now I was indignant. It was a slur upon the character of Old Put, one of the gentlest and best bred of horses, to insinuate that he would behave badly with a lady on his back.

"No man except myself has ridden him in years," I said. "Perhaps no woman has ever ridden him at all, but that is no reason why one should not ride him now."

"But I am afraid," she protested again in timid fashion. All her courage seemed to have gone. Again I say you have only to be stern with a woman to keep her at your feet.

"Nonsense!" I said, a little roughly. "We'll stop talking about this and do it at once."

I halted the horses and changed the saddles, while she looked doubtfully on. Old Put submitted like an angel, and I drew the girth tight. Then I said:

"Now, if you would know what a real saddle horse is, Miss Howard, just jump up there."

"Will you help me?"

Another proof of her subdued condition!

I held out my hand in most gallant fashion. She leaned on it for a moment to give herself a support and sprang into the saddle. Then, giving Old Put a cut with the switch which she had picked up, she galloped away.

"Goodby, Mr. Marcel!" she shouted. "I ride the better horse now."

She turned Old Put's nose to the southwest, and away she went at the very best speed of which my good horse was capable, and that was much. Her yellow hair flew in the wind, as before, like the streamers of a defiant battleflag, and either with or without intent the red cap she wore was set rakishly and saucily on one side of her head.

CHAPTER III.

THE MERIT OF A GOOD HORSE.

I paused, not to swear this time, but for a momentary reflection on the vanity of man and the deceitfulness of woman in taking advantage of it, and then I sprang upon the back of that old brown hack—confound him for an army mule without the ears!—and gave chase. I had no switch or whip, but I roweled him and kicked him in the sides until I frightened him into a greater speed than he or any one else believed to dwell within his long frame. He gave a wild snort, and we plunged after the fleet girl, rocking and swaying like a boat in a stormy sea, but even with such exertion he could not compare with Old Put. Despite the anxiety of the moment, I noted his inferiority with some pride, but then I remembered how much depended upon the success of the pursuit, and I continued to urge on my own mount.

Strive and strain as we could and ride and thump as I would with all my arms and legs, we lost ground rapidly. The girl turned her head once to look at me, and I thought I saw a look of triumph on her face, but I suppose it was my imagination which was industriously tormenting me just then. I groaned at the certainty of her escape, and then hope seized me, for I remembered suddenly that I, too, had a trick to play. Old Put and I possessed a common language in which we often talked, with perfect understanding. I put two fingers to my lips and blew between them a long, shrill whistle, which cut the air and traveled like the scream of a fife. It was a request, a command even, to him to stop and wait for me. He twisted his long neck in the manner of one listening, looking back at me to see what I meant, but he went on, though with slightly diminished speed, his manner indicating that he was uncertain what I had said.

The girl was belaboring him with the switch, for she must have noticed his decreasing gait. I whistled again, and as Old Put's pace sank to a trot she beat him fiercely with the switch. A third whistle, and Old Put, now in perfect accord with me, stopped stock still; not only that, but he faced about and neighed joyously. The girl threw he remains of her switch upon the ground and began to cry, not pitifully, but angrily, fiercely. I rode up slowly and held out my hand to Old Put, who rubbed his nose against it. He knew his master and best friend. Never had I beaten him, and now there were stripes and welts on his side where she had pounded him with a switch, or rather stick.

"Why did you not tell me what sort of a horse he was," she cried, "and then I would not have made myself look so ridiculous, sitting here as if I had been tied and waiting for you to come up?"

"Miss Howard," said I, in some astonishment, "do you expect me to show you the way to escape?"

"I do not expect anything from you, a rebel," she said. "Do not speak to me again."

All right; that suited me. I did not wish to talk to her. She used words only to inveigle me into some incautious mood. But it was necessary for me to tell her to dismount in order that I might change saddles again, as I did not intend to give her another such opportunity. I did not offer to assist her, having had enough of that, but stood beside the brown hack, watching her with a look that was now strictly military.

"Why don't you help me down?" she said angrily. "Have you no courtesy for a lady?"

"You have declined such assistance from a rebel before," I said in reply to her unexpected question.

"And I decline again. You needn't offer it," she said abruptly, springing to the ground, when I had no thought of offering it.

As soon as she was off his back Old Put showed the greatest distrust of her and aversion. He shied as far away from her as my hold on his bridle would let him, and his big, dark eyes shone with wrath. I was glad that he had come back to his senses, and he, like I, should have known her thoroughly from the first and always.

"We don't intend to be deceived by her again, do we, old comrade?" said I to him.

He nodded his head in emphatic fashion, and his big eye winked intelligently. Her eyes flashed a little, but she took no other notice.

"Look well at this lady, Put," I said. "Do you note her?"

He nodded.

"She's English, we're Americans, and therefore she's an enemy and not to be trusted. Watch her well," I continued.

He nodded violently.

"Now, Miss Howard," I said severely, "I've changed those saddles, and they are ready for our use when we need them, but meanwhile we'll walk again, as we've tired our horses out for the second time, and all your fault too."

She said nothing, but walked on in the way which I had indicated, keeping eight or ten feet from me. She had ceased to cry and had given her features a fixed and angry set.

I was troubled greatly. We had wasted so much time over her futile efforts to escape that the problem of a night's shelter had grown more difficult and pressing, and I intended that my attention should not be diverted from it again. Therefore I would take precautions. I drew from my pocket a long silk handkerchief, a trophy of the Monmouth campaign, which I had preserved with great care.

"Hold out your hands," I said.

"What would you do?" she asked, turning upon me a look of fire.

But I was firm. My experience had been too great.

"Hold out your hands," I repeated. "I intend to bind them together. You play too many tricks."

"You are not a gentleman."

"You have told me that three or four times already. It won't bear further repetition."

"I will not submit to such a thing."

"Then I will have to use force, which will make it much more unpleasant for you."

I hated to do what I had planned. It was rude and severe, but then there are few who have had women prisoners like mine, and consequently there are few who are in a position to judge me. I prefer greatly to deal with the regular forces, but in this case I had no choice, and so I strengthened my will and proceeded.

"Hold out your wrists," I repeated. "I shall not hurt you. I merely wish to keep you out of further mischief."

"I shall never forgive you," she said.

I could afford to laugh at such a threat.

"I trust that nobody will forgive me until I ask for forgiveness," I said.

She looked at me, her eyes full of rebellion. I thought she was going to raise her hand to strike me, but women are so changeable and uncertain. Instead she held out her hands meekly.

I bound her wrists together and noticed that they were white and well molded. The handkerchief was soft and could not pain her at all, and, besides, her hands were bound in front of her and not behind her. She need feel no inconvenience, but she must realize that her opportunities for mischief were diminished vastly. Old Put looked at her with an air of triumph, as much as to say, "Now, miss, you are being punished, and punished deservedly, for beating me so much." That seemed to be her own understanding of herself.

We resumed our march, the horses walking behind us. The rim of the sun was now meeting the rim of the earth, and the western skies were tinged with ruddy fire. In the east the misty gray of twilight was descending on field and forest, and the chill of night was creeping over everything. Even in our South Carolina latitudes the nights are cold in midwinter, and I shivered as a twilight wind, with a raw edge to it, swept over the plain.

There was a heavy cloak hanging at her saddle horn, for she had not ventured upon her journey unprepared. I took it off and threw it over her shoulders. It fell below her waist like a great

Red Lake Falls Gazette.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER

—BY—

PHIL. A. KAUFER.

Published weekly. Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the postoffice at Red Lake Falls.

☞ All matter for publication in THE GAZETTE must be handed in on or before Tuesday 6 p. m.

THE HARVEST.

This is one of the earliest harvests on record in the Red River Valley. Cutting of wheat began on the 29th of July, and the end of last week saw thousands of acres in Red Lake county in shock. Monday of this week the harvest became general and fine progress is now being made, with conditions well nigh perfect—dry weather, cool days, the soil firm as a result of the dry spell of the past few weeks, and indications point to a continuation of these conditions.

With Saturday closes the second week of the harvest. Reports from all parts of the county are very favorable. The grade is good and the yield on the well drained land will be above the average. The protracted heat spell during July did very little damage, perhaps 5 per cent or less. Much stacking will be done this year, as the experience of last year has taught many farmers a dear lesson. Altogether, the northwest faces conditions that are extremely bright and especially so in comparison to last year. Hay of the finest quality has been put up in almost limitless quantities, and stock will be well wintered, while a year ago not only grain, but also hay and straw were rotted and ruined by the unprecedented wet spell in the fall. With fine granaries and ample feed of the best kind provided, the business of the Northwest should soon feel the revivifying influence. Here at home, the local merchants have not yet been able to explain why business remained so good the past year, after the unfavorable conditions last fall. But the fact was that the books as a whole show an increase of business over the year previous. In view of these facts we may look forward to an unusually prosperous year, stimulated by the prosperity of theagricultural interests.

Editor Jason Weatherhead, of the Ada Herald, has completed his first year of ownership, and says some nice things himself, real gracefully. The fact is, Weatherhead had a pretty big shoe to fill when he stepped into the journalistic nook vacated by J. C. Norby, but he has filled it in a way that must be acceptable to his patrons. Now if he will let up on Charley and Hans and the other brothers thereabouts, he will improve his editorial columns immeasurably. This applies equally to Charley and Hans.

THE STATE FAIR

MINNESOTA'S EXPOSITION THIS YEAR WILL ECLIPSE ALL PREVIOUS DISPLAYS.

Many Evidences of Growth Apparent in New Buildings and Other Improvements—September 2 to 7, Inclusive, the Dates for the Big Event.

Most characteristic of all the advance news about the Minnesota State Fair are those items which go to show the wonderful growth of the institution. The Minnesota fair has, in fact, outgrown its position as a "state" fair. It is now a Northwestern exposition and a national live stock exhibit. In this character it is not surprising that it needs more room in every department and that the reports of managers' meetings are filled with the endeavors of the officials to find space for the would-be exhibitors and to provide accommodations for the great crowds which will undoubtedly be present.

Last year's fair was a "record-breaker" in every department; this year's fair promises to so far eclipse that of 1900 as to make it seem a trifling occasion. The management has secured attractions of the highest character and as part of the exhibits will have such a display of live stock as to fairly set in the shade the grand live stock exhibit made in Chicago last winter.

Roosevelt to Be There.

The fair managers made their first hit by inviting Vice President Theodore Roosevelt to open the fair. The invitation went first, informally, through Thomas H. Shevlin of Minneapolis, vice president of the fair, and after the formal invitation of the board, Mr. Roosevelt accepted in an autograph letter. He is to address the crowd from the grand stand on Monday morning, Sept. 2, at 11 o'clock, formally opening the fair, and he will later hold an informal reception and be the guest of the officers of the fair and various notables at luncheon. In the afternoon he will review the exhibits.

A National Live Stock Exhibit.

National exhibitions by the American Shorthorn Breeders' association and the American Hereford Breeders' association in addition to the usual large exhibit of cattle of all breeds will draw to the Minnesota State Fair of 1901 a collection of live stock which will form the largest exhibit of its class ever made, even eclipsing the Chicago exhibit of last year. It will be the event of the year for farmers, breeders and all people interested in the diversification of Western farm industries.

The fair management has joined with the breeders' association in offering increased premiums in both these classes of live stock and the premiums have been enlarged in other departments wherever possible.

Auction Sales of Blooded Cattle.

On certain days of the fair there will be auctions without reserve of many head of fine Shorthorns and Herefords. This will give farmers and breeders an excellent opportunity to improve their herds.

Making Room for the Show.

Every department of the fair is feeling the influence of the live stock exhibitions and the other great drawing cards which the managers have arranged. To accommodate a very persistent demand for space for exhibiting a process of expansion is going on this summer on the grounds.

Most conspicuous among the new buildings is the Agricultural Hall, which was erected with an appropriation of $25,000 made by the state legislature last winter. This building is 260x240 feet in size and of very fine architectural appearance. It is designed by C. R. Aldrich, the architect of many of the university and college of agriculture buildings. It is now the most prominent building on the grounds and the one which will be naturally entered first by visitors. It will contain the exhibits of the horticultural and agricultural departments.

Other Evidences of Growth.

The old Horticultural building will be used this year to accommodate the carriage department and the old carriage building will be given up to farm implement exhibitors. Several new buildings will be erected by farm machinery manufacturers and some may have to be housed in tents. Another temporary stock barn has been built to take care of the overflow caused by the presence of the big national cattle shows. The grand stand is enlarged by the addition of 2,000 bleacher seats. A new toilet building of generous dimensions and modern accommodations will be an appreciated feature. Several of the concessionaries will have attractive new buildings and the Minneapolis Journal will erect a substantial and handsome structure. The government of the United States will establish a postoffice on the grounds and for its use the fair will supply a building of suitable size.

Prizes and Premiums.

Early in the season the fair officers revised the premium list, making extensive additions and increasing the amounts in many cases. These liberal offers have been supplemented in many instances by offers from individuals or firms interested in the success of the fair. In the cattle department, especially in Shorthorns, Herefords and Aberdeen-Angus cattle, the combined offers of the fairs and the breeders' associations make the premiums worth the utmost endeavors of the exhibitors.

In all some $40,000 in prizes and premiums are offered by the fair management.

The Amusement Side of the Fair.

People go to the state fair to be amused as well as to study. One of the chief means of amusement at a fair is found in the race track. At the Minnesota fair the races are under the best conditions—they are simply trials of speed without any objectionable features. As the purses are large and the reputation of the fair the best, the list of entries is found to excel last year's fine line of horses.

It should be remembered that there are fast races on every day of the fair—Monday and Saturday included—and that none of the races is for less than $1,000, while the big trot on Minneapolis day and the pace on St. Paul day are each for $5,000.

Pool selling is prohibited at the fair grounds. The races are clean; and the track is one of the fastest in the country.

Evening Entertainments.

Besides the races there are specialty entertainments in front of the grand stand every afternoon of fair week. These specialties, with variations, will be shown each evening under electric light. So it will be possible for a visitor to enter the grounds early in the forenoon and stay till the evening performance is over. The evening amusements will include racing by electric light, hurdle races, chariot races, standing races, women's races, monkey races, riderless horse races, exhibitions on the rolling sphere by the famous equilibrist, Lional Legare, aerial exhibitions by the renowned Pickett family—and lastly, a magnificent spectacular pyrotechnic drama, put on by the famed fireworks makers, the Pains, of Chicago.

State Fish Exhibit.

With the co-operation of the state game and fish commission and the fair management, an exhibit of the fish of Minnesota will be made. Every known variety of native fish will be shown in capacious tanks. Not only will the full grown specimens be displayed, but the fry and the yearlings will be shown so that visitors may study the development of the fish.

Attractions Galore.

The foregoing are but a few of the attractions of the fair. The exhibits in the main exposition building are to be greatly improved in character this year. The dairy building was overflowing—all space assigned—before Aug. 1. The poultry department will have a larger and better display than ever. The woman's building is one of the most attractive on the grounds. Liberal premiums are offered, and the best specimens of textile and fine art work will be on exhibition. The state federation of woman's clubs will maintain headquarters upon the grounds during the fair. The rooms will be kept open for use of women, whether members or not, and all are cordially invited to make the place headquarters while visiting the state fair. Special exercises will be held daily during the week, at which topics of general interest will be considered.

It is believed that the farm implement and machinery exhibit will be the largest and most complete ever seen at any state fair.

Best in the Union.

"But few human undertakings better deserve the title 'ideal' than has this great agricultural exposition during late years," says "Farm, Stock and Home." "It is acknowledged to be 'the best in the union,' which is equivalent to saying that it has no superior any where, and to be superior comes most pleasingly near being 'ideal.' The high character of this exposition is yet unknown to too many citizens of Minnesota and sister states, and this is written that many more may know it; and when they realize what it is they will surely let no ordinary barrier keep them from seeing with their own eyes and understanding with their own judgment what a state fair par excellence looks like and is."

Canada Eclipsed Too.

Not only does the Minnesota fair lead in the states, but it has gone ahead of the great Canadian fair, which has always been held up as a model of what a fair should be. Up to 1900 the great Canadian fair at Toronto was the largest fair in America. Last year the Canucks were rather surprised to find that the Minnesota fair had exceeded their largest gate receipts and was putting up a better exhibition in many ways.

Visitors Well Cared For.

Minneapolis and St. Paul are cities full of people adept in entertaining. They will look well to the interests of the people who visit the state fair during the first week in September. At the fair grounds the managers are ever alert to see that people are taken care of. Many conveniences are being added this year for the comfort of visitors—telephones, postoffice, drinking fountains, park benches on the grounds, etc. The grounds are well policed and sanitation is carefully looked after.

Exhibitors have the best of treatment. The Minnesota fair is noted for paying its premiums promptly. The judges are men of the highest standing. Every thing is done "decently and in order."

Half-Fare Rates on the Railroads.

Every railroad running into Minneapolis has joined in making a rate of one fare for the round trip for the week of Sept. 2-7. These rates apply from all points within 200 miles of the Twin Cities, but are extended to 300 west, so as to include almost all of North and South Dakota.

MURDER AND SUICIDE

SHERBURNE COUNTY MAN KILLS A CHILD, ITS MOTHER AND HIMSELF.

Tragedy at McGregor in Which One Man Is Killed and Another Seriously Wounded—Immense Ore Shipments From Iron Range Docks—Board of Appeals Named by Governor Van Sant—General State News.

Sherburne, Minn., Aug. 1.—A frightful murder and suicide occurred five miles south of Sherburne during the afternoon.

Fred Yost, a prosperous farmer, living seven miles northeast of this place, was recently held to the grand jury on the charge of bastardy, preferred by Eliza Kunkle, who has been his housekeeper for about two years. The woman was fearful of violence, having been repeatedly threatened by Yost, and her attorneys, O'Neil & O'Neil, removed her to Frank Viebahan's place, south of town, where the desperate deed was committed.

In the forenoon Yost went to Messrs. O'Neil's office and hurled threats and abuse at them, and immediately departed on his gruesome errand. Appearances indicate that the woman saw him approach the house and hooked the screen and locked the door. Yost tore open the screen door and kicked in the door, when the woman confronted him with the 10-months-old child in her arms.

He fired with a 38-calibre revolver, the ball entering the child's forehead and emerging at the back of the head, thence tearing a groove through the door. The woman was shot through the fleshy portion of the right arm, the bullet passing into the side. When doctors arrived upon the scene she was in such an extreme condition as the result of the shock that no attempt was made to locate the bullet. They assert, however, that her symptoms preclude any possibility of recover.

Neighbors say the fiend then walked some 200 yards to where his team was secured and deliberately placed the revolver against his right temple and fired. Death was instantaneous.

TRAGEDY AT M'GREGOR.

One Man Is Dead and Another Is Seriously Wounded.

Aitkin, Minn., Aug. 2.—One man dead and one seriously wounded is the result of a shooting affair that took place in the little town of McGregor, east of here on the Northern Pacific railroad. It seems that the trouble started over the prospective marriage of Tony Jordan to a Miss Clasen. The father, Mr. Clasen, opposed it, while the mother gave her consent, which caused trouble between the elder couple. Jordon and Mrs. Clasen came to Aitkin to start divorce proceedings. On returning to McGregor trouble occurred which led to the serious wounding of Clasen. The sheriff and Dr. Avery proceeded to McGregor on the freight and in attempting the arrest of Jordon, Deputy Sheriff Hudson shot and instantly killed him. Clasen, the wounded man, was brought here and placed in a hospital.

HUGE ORE SHIPMENTS.

Over a Million Tons Leave Iron Range Docks in July.

Duluth, Aug. 2.—The Duluth and Iron Range road shipped from it. docks at Two Harbors 1,005,614 tons of iron ore during the month of July. This is the first time in the history that a single dock system has shipped 1,000,000 tons of ore in one month. The same dock shipped 871,624 ton in June. The total ore shipments from Duluth in July were about 700,000 tons.

The total shipments of ore from the head of the lakes, including Duluth, Superior and Two Harbors, this season, are 4,687,118 tons, about 170,000 tons under the shipments of last year at this time, owing to the loss of about three weeks at the beginning of the present season, due to marine strikes.

Duluth—E. H. Pugh, Duluth; C. J. Strang, Alexandria; James K. Stone, East Granite Falls, reappointed.

SHOT BY HIGHWAYMEN.

Minnesota Farmer Refuses to Be Held Up and Is Fatally Wounded.

Elk River, Minn., Aug. 4.—Gus Mortz, a farmer living near here, was shot by a highwayman about two miles from town. He was wounded twice in the body and once in the neck and it is believed that he will not survive. His assailant escaped.

Mortz had been to town where he sold a load of potatoes and was on his way home. At a lonely spot in the road a man emerged from the woods and climbed into Mortz' wagon, demanding his money. The farmer responded by knocking the man down and out of the wagon.

As soon as the robber could regain his feet he drew a revolver and emptied it at Mortz, three of the shots taking effect. The team ran away and the wounded man tumbled out of the wagon.

When the horses reached the barn and the absence of their driver was discovered, a searching party was organized with the result that Mortz was found at the roadside, a short distance from the scene of the shooting, in a semi-unconscious condition.

PLACED UNDER ARREST.

Boy Who Shot His Playmate at Monticello, Minn.

Buffalo, Minn., Aug. 6.—Ernest Elzemeier of St. Louis, who shot his playmate, Gerald Bailey, at Monticello, Friday, has been arrested and is locked up in the jail here. The two boys had some words over the possession of a knife and, according to an ante-mortem statement of young Bailey, Elzemeier had said that if he did not give him the knife he would blow his head off. Almost immediately after this threat, the shotgun in the possession of Elzemeier was discharged, the load striking Bailey in the right side. Death ensued in six hours.

The authorities were at first inclined to believe that the threat was not meant in seriousness and that the shooting was purely accidental. The county attorney, after investigating the affair, decided to have Elzemeier placed under arrest. He is 16 years old and Bailey was 13.

ORE TRAIN WRECKS BRIDGE.

Accident on Stony Brook Division of Eastern Minnesota.

West Superior, Wis., Aug. 6.—Three hundred feet of the 800-foot bridge over the St. Louis river on the Stony Brook division of the Eastern Minnesota road collapsed during the afternoon with the first ore train that ever passed over the new road.

Jerry O'Reilly, head brakeman, was crushed to death and Thomas Phillips, engineer, and H. G. Odell, fireman, were badly bruised and cut, escaping greater injury by jumping to the water, 30 feet below. Assistant Trainmaster John Postal was probably seriously injured.

The ore train consisted of 34 cars, carrying 1,700 tons of iron ore. Eight cars with the engine were on the main part of the bridge when it collapsed. Sixteen cars went down and all are at the bottom of the river.

RECORD BREAKING MONTH.

Lumber Shipments From Lake Ports Reach High Point.

Duluth, Aug. 2.—July is the record breaker so far as lumber shipments by water are concerned, there having been more than 51,000,000 feet recorded as shipped from Duluth alone, while Superior has sent out about 9,000,000 and Two Harbors 5,000,000 feet additional. The largest prior month was July last year, with 46,000,000 feet from Duluth docks.

These large shipments will probably continue for some time, as docks are full and the mills are steadily adding to the quantity, while all their lumber for months ahead is sold. Chartering is very free.

There is almost nothing but lumber and ore now in the minds of vessel men, the grain trade having slacked off to a mere memory.

Duluth Boy Fights a Duel.

Duluth, July 31.—Word has reached Duluth that Adolph Hartman, son of Mr. and Mrs. Emil Hartman of this city, has just won a duel with swords with Lieutenant Pachmann of the German army. It was a bloody encounter and the Duluth boy escaped with but one serious wound, while Lieutenant Pachmann was wounded in three places, including the jugular vein, and it is estimated that it will take three months to make him fit for duty again.

Killed by an Electric Car.

St. Paul, Aug. 2.—Constant M. Baly, aged 65, was run over by a Stillwater electric car and instantly killed, at the corner of Fifth and Wabasha streets. The shrieks of the aged man as the fender passed over him and left him to the mercy of the wheels attracted the attention of pedestrians for a block around.

Jilted Lover Kills Himself.

THE DREYFUS CASE IN TATTOO

A French Coachman's Skin Bears 120 Scenes in the Celebrated Trial.

A French coachman in Paris is a walking illustration of l'affaire Dreyfus. Some time ago he was in one of the punishment companies in Africa, says the New York Commercial Advertiser, and an artistic comrade killed time by tattooing him all over his body and legs with no less than 120 illustrations of prominent scenes in the case, including portraits of the leading personages connected with and various allegorical and emblematic devices as well. Black, blue, red and green colors have been employed, and the work has been executed with much skill. One of the surgeons of his regiment offered him 400 francs for his skin, explaining that he could remove the surface without pain or risk, and that a speedy recovery would follow. The soldier, however, preferred to keep his hide and the sketches tattooed on it, and therefore declined the offer. So, at least, he avers, and the wonderful success of the performance, which took about 20 months in the execution, is calculated to confirm the idea that the proposal may really have been made. What may be styled the two "pieces de resistance" are to be found on the back, and on the portion of the body on the other side, which afforded the most space for the flights of the artist's genius. On the former the terrible ceremony of degradation at the Ecole Militaire is graphically depicted. Three months were devoted to it, and it is surmounted by a number of allegorical designs, with hosts of figures personating goddesses, among whom may be seen one representing France, pointing out to the ill-fated captain the distant Ile du Diable. The other ambitious production gives the spectacle of the court-martial by which Dreyfus was condemned. Above it, on the left breast, a dagger pierces a heart, from which blood is flowing, and on the other side is beheld a serpent in the act of strangling a man. The arms are chiefly dedicated to counterfeit presentments of the generals whose names were so much before the public—Mercier, Billot, Zurlinden, De Boisdeffre, Gonse, and so on—and also to a portrait of the late President Felix Faure. Innumerable flags and other patriotic emblems garnish the thighs and legs, and there are other sketches as well.

SPOILED THE FLIRTATION.

The Pony Was a Racer and Kept Out in Front to His Rider's Disgust.

A gentleman who is a member of the Meadow Brook Hunt club and delights in horseback riding received a few days ago a wiry "cayuse," or cow-pony, as they are called in the northwest. The animal had some speed and an easy gait, and after riding it around the country roads a few days he rode it one evening, with a party of ladies and gentlemen who were out for a moonlight canter.

The party split up into couples, and, while the gentleman in question would much prefer to have taken the rear of the line with the lady whose escort he was, yet the pony developed an unexpected ambition to lead the procession, according to the New York Mail and Express. He let the "cayuse" have its own way, only to find that the headstrong animal insisted on being at least one-half a length in front of the horse ridden by the lady.

There was no holding that pony back on even terms with the other horse. It pranced about, jumped from side to side and pulled the bit and would be quiet only when it had its nose well to the front. The lady enjoyed it immensely, but the gentleman—well, he left unsaid many things which he had planned to say to the young lady when they started on the ride. Subsequently the gentleman found the pony had been used for racing in the west and had been trained to "go to the front and stay

JOLLY OLD UNCLE JOSH

HIS GREAT GENEROSITY TOWARDS HIS NEWLY MARRIED NIECE.

A REALISTIC ROMANCE OF RED LAKE FALLS IN WHICH A NUMBER OF PROMINENT BUSINESS MEN TAKE A VERY CONSPICUOUS PART.

(Copyrighted by W. S. Guthrie.)

"Miss Summers—Polly—I—I—er—dare I—" But the speaker took a header over bashfulness only to hear a sweet

"Yes, Charlie."

"Can I aspire to—er—to—that is"

Again a lapse into silence followed by an encouraging

"Yes, Charlie".

"Oh, if I might only hope to—er—to—"

Another failure of language. It was seemingly a hopeless case, and might have been, only for a demure "Charlie, I have said 'yes' twice, and if you mean it, I mean it, too, and—"

And to this day that young man will insist that he popped the question.

All this happened away 'down east," and it wasn't long before there was a wedding. Not much longer before there was a letter from Polly's Uncle Josh, (Hon. Joshua Turner, an old pioneer of Red Lake county) rich, generous and level headed, who wrote effusively of his delight at her exhibition of what he called "grit," and he proposed that if the young people would locate at Red Lake Falls he would start them up in life, as a wedding gift, having fully explained that this is the best spot in the world for young married people to get a start. Of course they accepted, and were soon bidding their friends adieu.

A few weeks subsequent to the above conversation a travel-stained party arrived in Red Lake Falls. Our friend, Uncle Josh, was in charge and he led the party straightway to the Grand View Hotel. "We'll go to the Grand View," he said, "'cause that's the popular place and strictly first-class. I have known Krueger and Hayton, the proprietors, for years and they are mine hosts after mine own heart; being endowed with that delightful intuition that makes a guest feel at home, comfortable, contented, and in mighty good luck. The house is one of convenience: the apartments are well furnished and the cuisine—well, that hotel is noted for its excellent table, so I have engaged rooms here until your own house is in readiness."

"After breakfast is over," continued the old man, "I must take you for a little drive and then we'll proceed to buy your outfit. To expedite matters I'll just call up phone No. 17 and have Zaiser Bros., our enterprising livery men, send us around a rig." When the handsome carriage, with elaborate trappings and prancing horses drew up in front of the hotel, Polly declared it to be a turnout fit for a queen. "Yes Sir-ee" replied Uncle Josh, "that is a purty neat rig—the three S's, Speed, Safety, and Style' is Zaiser Bros.' coat of arms, and best of all, the rates are mighty reasonable. Zaiser Bros.' wedding, party and funeral equipments are unsurpassed." It was in a stylish turnout indeed that the rounds of the city were made.

"No grass shall grow under our feet," remarked Uncle Josh, "so what's first on the program?" "Oh, goodness knows there's lots to buy," remarked Polly. "Then suppose we buy 'lots' first," quoth Charley, without turning a hair. "Well, I see you've got a great head for business," laughed Uncle Josh, "we'll just stop at Ed. L Healy Land & Loan Co.'s office. I can always depend upon them for bargains in real estate, as they never hold out false lights to induce friends to buy, but what they tell you about property, may be set down as solid facts. The Ed. L. Healy Land & Loan Co. control a large list of desirable residence as well as farm properties, and their judgment on the 'good things' is par excellence." Accordingly Mr. Healy, a member of the firm, accompanied the trio on their drive and before returning had sold to Uncle Josh, for his wards, a cosy lot and a fine farm.

"Yes, and we must have a new two-story residence on our lot Uncle Josh" suddenly spoke up Poll. "I've seen so many nice ones in Red Lake Falls that it sent glimmering my first thought of love in a cottage." "Nuf sed, 'nuf sed," laughed Uncle Josh. "I 'lowed it would come to that, and your wish shall be gratified. We'll see my old friend J. J. Rue, leading contractor and builder of this part of the country. He has built most of the fine houses and business buildings in this town. J. J. Rue will furnish everything from the stone for the foundation to the shingles for the roof, including the drawing of the plans to the executing of the same" The trio immediately called on Mr. Rue and he promised to have them a fine new house finished in a very short time.

"Having already provided a cage for the bird," said Uncle Josh, "now the first thing we'll look after will be the furnishings for it." Hereupon Polly energetically declared that she had heard so much about A. M. Anderson & Bros. that she had decided to go there. The result was that they were ushered into such a bewildering display that the girl was at first at a loss how to select. But she soon yielded to the seductiveness of a magnificent parlor suite, a bedroom set in oak, golden finish, that would do credit to old Mr. Klondyke himself. To this she added an easy rocker for Uncle Josh and did not forget a most convenient and ornamental writing desk for "Hubby" Charles, having come to the conclusion that A. M. Anderson & Bros.' prices on their entire stock of complete house furnishings were below the very whisper of competition.

"A pretty good start," said the old man, "and now we'll go to O'Brien Bros.' big hardware and stove store where Polly's housewifely instincts will have full play in marvels of kitchen apparatus. There is not an establishment in the country that carries a more comprehensive stock of cooking machinery" remarked Uncle Josh. "Every possible piece of kitchen furniture from a tin dipper to a cooking range is here in all styles and variety." If Polly fails to accomplish wonders in the culinary art, it will not be for want of superior cooking utensils, for she purchased a Majestic range with all other equipments needed in a well regulated kitchen all of which Uncle Josh paid for with delight, 'cause he knew O'Brien Bros. had treated him all right just as they treat everybody.

"Let's see—I promised you a gold watch, didn't I?" queried Uncle Josh of Polly, "and H. W. Anderson is the man to give us the worth of our money." Entering the popular jewelry store the old man gallantly acquitted himself of his promise and then directed Polly's attention to the superior stock of silverware carried by the house. "There is a splendid stock" said the old man, "and I will guarantee the stock to be the very best. Pick out your family clock while here" he added. "Anderson has a magnificent line. Don't forget another fact," he continued, "if ever you are unfortunate enough to need optical goods this is the place to come to get your eyes scientifically tested and fitted free, and say, my boy, remember that Anderson is also an expert doctor on sick watches."

At this point, somewhat to the confusion of Charley, the old man indulged in a half serious criticism of his personal appearance. "You are decidedly off style for a townsman," he said, "and we'd better go see the C. O. D. store about some new duds. That's an up to date place, where they understand the changing styles and are noted for good fits, and are selling out at very low figures. I bet you'll look more like a newly married man when you get togged out in a C. O. D. suit." Accordingly, having found goods and prices irresistable, Charles purchased a neat suit and then invested in a complete outfit of men's furnishings from a late style hat down to socks, and he readily agreed that Uncle Josh took him to the right place when he took him to the C. O. D.

"Well, scat my! exclaimed Uncle Josh, with a David Harum accent, as they reached the street. "I must run over to the First State Bank and get another check book. Come along with me and get acquainted with Mr. Gareeau and staff, for of course you will do business with them, and it is always more pleasant to be personally acquainted with the people you do business with. This bank is as solid as the base of the universe and is managed on safe conservativeness, and has a strong working capital. You will find them ever ready to extend accommodations compatible with business principles."

"Guess I'll open an account with the First State Bank right away", replies Charles, and he did.

After this visit, Uncle Josh suggested a resort to some place of refreshment. At the refreshment table the old man waxed philosophical. "Never neglect your larder," he said. "That important adjunct to housekeeping controls masculine temper. To that end you must patronize a grocer on whom you can depend for honest goods. Through a long term of years I have found Gareeau Bros. perfectly reliable. You will find this a careful firm, always fully stocked with every possible thing in the line of staple and fancy groceries, fresh and first-class, no shelf-worn goods there, while the prices are down to brass tacks. To keep peace in this family get all your groceries of Gareeau Bros.

"Halt!" commanded Uncle Josh, as the party came in front of W. A. Schreiter's drug store, "Walk right in." "Why, Uncle we're not sick, and—" "Guess I know that," laughed the old man, "but I suspect it won't be long before this young man begins to take an interest in matters of paregoric and—" "U-n-c-l-e!" "We'll go in anaway and get acquainted, besides Polly may find some toilet articles she wants." Sure enough, before leaving he was loaded down with combs, brushes, face powders and several bottles of fine perfumes. "Don't forget," added Uncle Josh, "to come here with your prescriptions, as W. A. Schreiter and his clerks are competent pharmacists who use none but pure and reliable drugs."

"Oh, say, uncle," exclaimed Polly, "where can I go for dry goods? This dress is hardly suitable, I must admit." "Well, my girl I want you to select from one of the most popular establishments in the city. I will direct you to Theo. LaBissoniere, who carries a stock of dry goods that for variety and value is seldom seen outside the largest metropolitan cities. Theo. LaBissoniere has all the latest weaves in fashionable dress goods and you are sure to be guided right in your selections. You will find Theo. pleasant to deal with and his employes polite and expert, while the prices cannot be duplicated." It did not take Polly long to tell a bargain when she saw one. She got a handsome dress, with all necessary trimmings and several other articles of 'fantastic dissarray' so dear to the heart of every woman.

Woman like, Polly was discussing the matter of how she would arrange her new house and was interrupted by Uncle Josh. "And those house fixin's remind me, said he that you haven't got your dishes yet. Now, the most famous stock in town for extent, quality and completeness is at L B Eastman's. There isn't positively a thing in the line of china, crockery, glass or porcelain needed for use or ornament in any part of the house that can not be found at Eastman's in indefinite variety and at wonderfully low prices. He also has a splendid stock of lamps of every description and decorated ware in abundance. Polly's big order suggested her appreciation.

While Uncle Josh was pondering on where to go next Polly suddenly asked: "Uncle, where can I find the leading millinery establishment?" "Just a few doors further on" remarked Uncle Josh, "and we will visit Miss Ford, one door north of the postoffice, who, by the way, has on hand one of the completest stocks of millinery to be found in the city. You can get what you want there, the latest styles and lowest prices being her motto. Miss Ford's good taste and experience guarantee that when you have purchased of her you have the thing according to fashion and a satisfaction that your work has been done by an artist." In a few minutes there never was a happier girl than Polly, for she got a 'perfect dream' of a hat and the bill didn't scare Uncle Josh either.

"I declare, uncle," exclaimed Charley, "there goes a handsome buggy. I must have one like that for the girl." "Get it right up here," said the old man. "You see Helm & Berthon conduct a carriage repository here that for variety and excellence of stock can't be beat. They carry surreys, carriages, buggies, phaetons and wagons of all the leading makes and styles, and they are satisfied with a modern profit, too." Polly was soon the possessor of a handsome carriage, but before they left Charley also got much interested in a road wagon. Uncle Josh saw what was up, so he quickly said, "I'll honor your draft for that too, my boy, 'cause I know that anything you get of Helm & Berthon is O. K."

"And so you are going to keep a horse," continued Uncle Josh, "I reckon I'll have to give you my mare 'Kitty.' but of course, you'll need a harness. Now the boss horse milliner of this section, to my notion, is L. A. Kaufer." Calling upon L. A. Kaufer Charles soon discovered that Uncle Josh had taken him to a good place and he ordered a set of harness that makes nag "Kitty" look like a two-year-old.

"And in the matter of insurance," the old gentleman continued. "That is also of importance. You will want a risk on your new house and goods; but you can't be too careful about getting it in a reliable agency. My old friend A. P. Toupin not only has lines of the solidest and best companies, but he is an expert and trustworthy underwriter. He has a large number of companies, all of which belong to the old reliable category, being well known for their prompt and satisfactory adjustment of losses. It's better to be safe than sorry and you will surely be safe in Toupin's agency." Charley agreed to attend to the insurance matter at his earliest convenience

"Strange, now, isn't it, how one thing suggests another?" observed Polly, after they had arranged for the insurance. "What's on your mind now, Polly?" asked Uncle Josh. "Well, I was just wondering if you happened to know a good decorator, too?" she asked "Well now, I reckon I do," acknowledged Uncle Josh, "and when I think of a decorator I think of F. F. Freund. He has reduced home adornment to a beautiful science—why bless you Frenz could make a pig pen look respectable and not half try. Prices mighty reasonable too," Polly was soon revelling in a perfect elysium of beautiful wall paper. Mr. Freund was subsequently contracted with to do the decorating, and that artist soon turned her home into a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

At this point Uncle Josh overheard Polly murmur something that sounded like "New Women," "What's that young lady," demanded the old man. "Oh now, Uncle, I only remarked to Charley how nice it would be if we could also both have a bicycle this summer," timidly replied the girl. "Well, that's dead easy," laughed the old man; "you just mentioned it in time, for right here is the place. F. F. Freund sells the Cleveland and Columbia wheels. "Just the wheel for me," said Charley, "and I think a Cleveland would also suit me," eagerly chimed in Polly. "Nuf sed, nuf sed," answered Uncle Josh. "I'll foot the bill, Freund sells 'em both. Cleveland and Columbia." Polly and Charley selected their bicycles and had coaster brakes attached, then Uncle Josh explained that Freund was headquarters for sundries and repairs.

"Yum, yum," laughingly escaped Polly's rosebud lips, as she glanced into J. M. Allard's attractive confectionery store. "Uncle Josh, you know I've got a sweet tooth, and those home made candies look so nice I just can't resist the temptation to go in." Charley here objected, 'cause he knew if Polly got into a confectionery store once, there's where she'd likely want to stay. He relented, however, when Uncle Josh said, "fruit, my boy, fruit," so in they went, and after regaling themselves in delicious fruit and ice cream soda, the girl loaded up on chocolates and bon bons enough to make every tooth in the county ache. Polly was a splendid judge of sweetmeats, and she indulged in a profuse compliment to what she found at Allard's.

"Well, now, I'm purty nigh to the end of my string," remarked Uncle Josh with a sign of relief, "but if there is anything under the sun that we've forgot, I recon we can get it at M. Shagnon & Benoit. That's the store where a slim purse can do a whole lot. M. Shagnon & Benoit's Racket is noted for its great variety of good goods. You will find a thousand and one things there suitable for both personal and household use and every article a bargain. Shagnon and Benoit are particular friends of mine and will be pleased to meet you both." Polly's big order at this store certainly suggested her thorough appreciation. "Why I really didn't know when to stop buying," she said to Uncle Josh. "Shagnon & Benoit sell such nice goods and so cheap. Everything I find here just strikes my fancy."

"Well great smoke, Charley, where in the name of creation did you get that rope? That's about the worst snipe that ever came in contact with my olfactory nerves," laughingly remarked Uncle Josh. "Step in here to J B. Armstrong's cigar store and get a J. B., then you'll have a gentleman's smoke. J. B. Armstrong takes great pride to keep all the leading brands, both imported and domestic, and consequently his place grows more popular every day." Charley was so well pleased with the cigar Uncle Josh treated him to that he bought a whole box and advised his wife to remember the brand when she got his next birthday present, not forgetting to also make note of J. B. Armstrong's fine display of other cigars, tobaccos, pipes etc.

"Law sakes!" suddenly exclaimed Uncle Josh, "all this trading 'round town has caused me to forget another one or two of the great essentials to future existence. Newly married folks can't live on love and scenery any more than anybody else—but your table would look slim without bread; its the 'staff of life,' you know. Polly must make the acquaintance of LaFave of the City Bakery. His bread, pies, and cakes and nick-nacks are conceded by all to be the finest on earth. Remember, Charley, there is no use of your 'ootsy tootsy' bothering herself much about baking, so long as there is a good baker in town like LaFave. He made that elegant cake I sent to weddin'." "Yes, and everybody said it was just lovely," eagerly responded Polly.

"Yes, and while we are on this important topic of gastronomics," continued Uncle Josh, "we must not forget meat It goes hand in hand with bread. Now the next thing is to locate a good market where you can get fresh, wholesome meats, poultry, etc., at all times, and according to my notion Madden & Linnehan are the only men to supply you. This is the boss meat market in the city and is popular with everybody who is particular to have the best. The reason for this is because Madden & Linnihan are very careful in the selection of stock, get the best of everything, and keep it fresh on cold storage. To keep your 'hubby' in a good humor, Polly, trade at Madden & Linnihan's market every time." Good advice.

"Now," cried the old gentleman "Now for a picture of this crowd. In good old country fashion we'll go to the photograph Gallery, and my friend W. A. Riechel has a good one. His pictures are wonderful in fidelity and finish. I want one full sized photo for my study and some small ones for my friends. W. A. Riechel has the sole of a true artist. All his work is a labor of love in which you will not stop short of perfection. As he is famous for enlarging I want to give you a life-size representation of 'yours truly.'" (The pictures of Uncle Josh, Polly and Charley may be seen at Riechel's studio any time the reader desires to call.)

Enroute to their home the party called at The Gazette office. "You'll want the news every week," remarked Uncle Josh, "and as this is the leading paper, I'll subscribe. The Gazette has a sworn circulation of over 1,400 weekly, and the fact is only eight country weeklies in the state beat this."

When the trio reached their home "that tired feeling" seemed to settle down upon them all—all at once—and Uncle Josh admitted that he for one was all tuckered out, whereupon Charlie took advantage of the conditions and made bold to remark: "Now, Uncle, You've been very, very kind, and I kinder hate to speak of anything else, but say, can't you recommend something—ahem!—a little wine or rye, for instance, for medical purposes, you know?" "Why certainly, my boy," quickly replied Uncle Josh, a bright smile chasing itself over his benevolent visage, "a case of good port and a little rye will be about the proper caper, and the proper person to apply to for such extras in this town is J. M. Bray. I'll personally guarantee anything that comes from Mose Bray's. Suppose you go down and bring up a little 'good cheer' right away and say, don't forget to tell Mr. Bray to put in a little of that K. O. R." And Charley acted on the order at once.

Upon summing up the wonderful events of the day Polly began to volubly express her thanks. "You have bought us everything" she exclaimed.

"Only one thing," replied Uncle Josh reflectively, "but I can remedy that. A. M. Anderson & Bros. the furniture men always have a nice lot of them and you can get one whenever you want it. I'll pay for the best."

"W-h-y" exclaimed Polly with great surprise, "Uncle, what can it be?"

"Well, it's a baby carriage, and—"

But Polly had fainted.

BOARD OF HEALTH ISSUES A SMALLPOX VACCINATION ORDER.

EVERY SCHOOL TEACHER AND PUPIL MUST HAVE A CERTIFICATE.

No teacher or pupil who cannot show a certificate of successful vaccination since 1896 will be permitted to attend the public schools of the state.

This is the tenor of a series of resolutions adopted at a recent meeting of the state board of health, which realizes that smallpox is, technically, epidemic and an outbreak may be expected when cold weather comes.

The resolutions adopted by the board are as follows:

"In view of the fact that smallpox is now epidemic and has been epidemic in the state of Minnesota since 1899, therefore be it

'Resolved, That the school boards, school directors and boards of health in the various districts, insist upon it that all school children and teachers in the schools of Minnesota—public, private or parochial—must show a certificate of successful vaccination since Jan. 1, 1896, or, in lieu thereof, a certificate from a responsible physician to the effect that the party is immune to vaccination. Such certificate of vaccination or immunity must be presented to the proper authorities on or before Oct. 15, 1901.

"Resolved, That all lumbermen, mining superintendents, railroad superintendents or others employing many men, women or children, require a certificate of successful vaccination since Jan. 1, 1896, or, in lieu thereof, a certificate from a responsible physician to the effect that the party is immune to vaccination, as a condition of continuing such employees in service."

It has been reported that there would be a general burning of old lumber camps during the fall. Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the state board of health, says that only in the case of abandoned camps will this be done.

At other places fumigation will be resorted to, and it is believed will be sufficient to prevent another outbreak. It is for the purpose of securing the co-operation of the lumbermen that they have been invited to attend the meeting.

MY CAPTIVE.

BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

coat, and I buttoned it securely around her neck.

"You are a barbarian," she said.

"I know it," I replied, "but I do not intend to let you suffer more than is necessary for your own good. That is the kind of barbarians we are in this country."

The country was lone and desolate, for we were on the sterile slopes of the hills. It was thinly peopled at the best of times, but now, raided incessantly by Tarleton's legion, which knew no mercy to anything, whether animate or manimate, and plundered, too, by wild bands which claimed to belong to either army, as the occasion served, and perhaps belonged to neither, the people had fled to securer regions, where one side or the other was master. Only those who have seen it know the sufferings of a country harried by opposing armies and predatory bands. I had hoped to find some friendly farmer bolder than the rest with whom my prisoner and I could find shelter, or if not that, at least some abandoned house which would give us a roof, but I saw no sign of a human face except our own, and no roof appeared either in the fields or among the trees. It was a solitude bleak and cold, and the declining sun, now half way behind the earth, warned me that it would soon be time to stop, for the darkness would be upon us, and in a land of hills, gullies and no roads we could not travel well without light.

Despairing of such shelter as I had expected, I turned our course toward a thick grove of trees rising like a great castle on the left. When we entered it, the shadows already made darkness there, and the night wind moaned among the dry branches of the trees. I saw the girl shiver, and again I felt pity for her in spite of all that she tried to do, though I lost none of my distrust and caution.

Almost in the center of the grove was a small open space, sheltered from the rush of cold air by the great trees which grew so thickly around it. It seemed to me to be the likeliest spot we could find for a camp. I hitched the horses to boughs of the trees and took from my pocket a small flask of that cheer which a good soldier seldom neglects. I drew the stopper and handed it to the girl.

"Take a little of this," I said. "You must if you do not expect to catch your death of cold."

"I would if I could," she said, "but I cannot while my hands are tied."

"I had forgotten the handkerchief," I replied, "but I don't think we'll need it any longer. You have been warned sufficiently."

I unbound her wrists and replaced the handkerchief in my pocket.

"But don't forget," I said, "that this handkerchief is an evidence that I have put my mark upon you and that you belong to me—that is, you are my prisoner until such time as I choose to give you up."

Her face flushed.

"I will not endure such talk," she said, "from a rebel who within six months may be hanged by his outraged king for treason."

"You can't escape it," I said, "and the king can't hang me before he catches me. It's a long way from London to South Carolina, and I hear the king is fat and lazy and suffers from seasickness."

But she drank the whisky, just a little of it, though enough to put more sparkle in her eye, and handed the flask to me without a word of thanks. Then she sat down on a fallen tree and looked idly in front of her as if she had no interest whatever in anything.

I gathered up armfuls of the dry brushwood and tossed them into a heap, to which I set fire with the flint and steel I always carried. The fire blazed up rapidly and snapped as it bit through the wood. Its merry crackling drowned the desolate moan of the wind, and the long red ribbons of flame and the fast forming bed of live coals threw out a kindly heat that fended off the chill of the night. Even the girl, angry and humiliated as she seemed to be, felt the influence of the light and warmth and edged along the log until she was much closer and the fire could shine directly upon her face. Old Put was frank in his appreciation, coming to the full length of his tether and wagging his head in a manner which said to me as plain as day, "You have done well." Even the stupid brown hack understood and imitated Old Put's example.

Higher rose the fire and drove back the shadows, but the darkness was now rolling up to the circle of light, and beyond the sparkle of the flames began to rise like a wall. The sun was gone, and a faint, fading pink tint in the west marked the way his flight had taken him. Over all the world the twilight drooped, and the winter wind mourned the dead day.

"Are there ghosts in the forest?" suddenly asked the girl.

"None that I ever heard of," I said.

"It is so unlike England."

"How?"

"So much wilder."

I had heard of their forests there, or rather what they call forests—some acres of trees, with the undergrowth cut away and the lawns shaven, every rod patrolled by keepers or workmen, a mere plaything of a forest—but here in America are the real forests, just as nature made them, the desolate wilderness through which the wild animals howl, while the lone wind plays its song on the branches or leaves of the trees. This is the real forest, a place in which man becomes about as big as a cork on the sea. Never the lone hunter, though 50 years his home, fails to feel its immensity and desolation. The girl drew the edges of her cloak a little more tightly and moved as close to the fire as the end of the log would allow her.

"If you will permit me," I said, "I will give you a better seat by the fire than that."

She rose without a word, and I rolled the log well within the warmth of the blaze. She resumed her seat, and the firelight flickered and played over her face, tinting her cheeks with deep red and tangling her bronze gold hair with patches of scarlet and crimson. The little red cap had been pulled securely down on her head, and, sitting there in the alternate light and darkness, her figure lithe and strong, she looked like some Saxon wood nymph.

I STARED INTO THE BED OF RED COALS.

But I did not cease my good deeds. I call myself a forethoughtful trooper, and from the saddlebags I carried across my saddle bow I took a cold chicken, a piece of cold boiled ham and some hard biscuits, a dinner fit for a prince, or rather an honest American citizen, which was better, in these hard times of war. To this royal collection I added a canteen well filled with water, remembered the stout little flask in my breast pocket, and the repast was complete, all but the serving.

Her eyes sparkled at the sight of the good things. Wood nymphs, Saxon or other, must eat.

"Let me carve the chicken," she said.

"You have neither a table, plates nor a knife," I said.

"This log will serve as a table, some of those clean dry leaves as plates, and you could lend me a knife."

"How could I lend you a knife, a weapon, after all the tricks you have tried to play upon me? You don't forget this, do you?"

I took the little toy pistol with which she had tried to shoot me out of my pocket and held it up before her, but she laughed. Women don't seem to have any conscience, or at least they forget their crimes, which is convenient for their peace of mind.

"Give me the knife," she said, "and don't waste time. I'm hungry."

I distrusted her as much as ever, even more, but I opened the blade of my clasp knife and handed it to her.

"A very good knife," she said, "but I have no doubt it was stolen from an Englishman. Ah, here it is—the name of an English maker on the blade!"

"It was not stolen!" I exclaimed indignantly. "I took it from him fairly at the battle of Monmouth, where he fell into my hands."

"That, I suppose, is a good enough title for a rebel," she said and began to carve the chicken.

It was a fine, fat chicken, beautifully roasted, and she showed that she knew how to carve, for she deftly clipped off a leg, which she held up before me.

"That looks fat and good to eat," she said, "and it's a fine chicken, but I've no doubt it was stolen from a loyal subject of King George."

"It's not true!" I exclaimed in some wrath. "He was a Tory farmer, I admit, but I did not steal the chicken. I took it before his eyes, and he never said a word."

"Afraid, I suppose, but it doesn't make any difference to you. It will taste just as good to a rebel. Here, take your piece on this big, clean leaf and eat."

I took the piece and ate. She carved off a portion for herself, too, and ate with a good appetite. Then I handed her the canteen of water and told her to take a drink.

"Don't be afraid," I said. "I took that water out of a clear brook in the wilderness, and the land through which it flowed belonged to God, not to any Englishman or Tory."

"But how about the canteen?" she asked. "Did you steal that from any English soldier or take it by violence, which is worse?"

I showed her the name of the maker, a Boston man, upon it.

"A vile rebel town, the worst of them all," she said.

But she took a good drink out of it, and when she handed it back to me I imitated her example. Then, while the fire crackled and blazed higher and the circle of light widened and the darkness beyond it thickened, we ate and drank, and I grew cheerful. I had defeated all her attempts, and tomorrow I would find Morgan and give her into other hands and be rid of all my troubles, yet I was compelled to admit once again that she was very beautiful with the firelight flickering and playing over her face and hair, but all the world knows, as I have said, that the handsome women are the most dangerous, the most cunning, and I was on my guard against any new attempt of hers to escape. Still, when I looked around at the blackness of the night and heard the sigh of the cold wind above the crackling of the fire, I did not think that she would dare to attempt it. I knew no woman who would venture alone on a winter night into that uncanny wilderness, and, knowing it, I felt easy.

CHAPTER IV.

SUPPER AND SONG.

The horses looked jealously at our supper. I was sorry for them, especially for Old Put, whose great, intelligent eyes said in the purest English, "I, too, am hungry, master." But I could do nothing. I had no provender for horses, and so I told him to wait as best he could until morning and I would find something for him if I had to rob a patriot farmer to do it. He bowed his head in resignation like the wise horse he was, while the brown hack, not so well bred, tugged at his bridle rein and thrashed about until I threatened him with a big stick.

After the chicken the girl served the cold ham and drank from the canteen again. I did likewise. Moreover, I urged her to wet her lips at the flask a second time as a further precaution against cold, which she did literally and no more. I was liberal rather than literal, for I was a soldier and knew its value. I took my blanket from my saddle bow and urged her to wrap it around herself, but she said "No;" that her heavy cloak was sufficient, and she would not deprive me even if I was a misguided rebel. I saw that she spoke truly, as her cloak was of the most ample character, and, so, having no further compunction, I wrapped the blanket around me, Indian style, and, sitting down on the dry leaves in front of the fire, leaned my head against the log. She sat on the log at the other end, leaning her head against a dead bough which was thrust straight up in the air. I had put the remains of the provisions back in my saddlebags.

Triumphant, warm, well fed, my cheerfulness, my satisfaction with myself, increased. I stared into the bed of red coals and saw figures, pictures, there. Near the center of the bed the coals had fallen into such shape that I could trace distinctly the epaulets of a general, and I knew that those epaulets were for me. The coals crumbled into new shapes and built the house which was to be mine when the war was victoriously over and I was ready to retire to it with my honors. She, too, seemed to be engaged in the same business, for she was staring with half closed eyes into the dreamy coals.

"Why are you a rebel?" she asked. "Is it from pure perverseness, for they say all you Americans are so?"

"They say many things about us in England that are not true," I said, "and this is one of them. The English themselves have often been rebels, and their present royal family, one of the worst they have ever had, and they have had the Stuarts, was placed on the throne by a just rebellion."

"You must know," she replied, "that in England the character of the sovereign is nothing. It is the sovereign principle. The worse the sovereign the better the court likes him."

We relapsed into silence and our study of the red coals. Old Put whinnied gently, raised his head and looked beyond the fire, as if he saw something in the darkness impenetrable to all but horse eyes.

"I'd better see to that," I said. "Old Put is not going to give a warning for nothing. He has a character to lose."

"A wildcat may be," she suggested.

"Perhaps, but I'll see."

I rose, still keeping my blanket wrapped around me, and ordered her to stay where she was under pain of being bound again. She promised, and I believed that she would not stir from her position on the log. The darkness and the desolation were not inviting.

I walked out into the black bank of the night, but could neither see nor find anything. I made a complete circuit around the oasis of light from the fire, and all was peaceful and quiet. I returned to the log, ready to scold Old Put for giving a false alarm, but refrained, reflecting that he might be nervous and irritable owing to his lack of food.

"What did you find?" asked the girl, looking at me with bright eyes.

"Nothing."

"I thought you wouldn't. It was a wildcat or maybe a harmless little squirrel."

"Aren't you afraid of the wild animals?"

"Not with such a brave rebel as you near me."

I opened my eyes a little wider and looked at her. It was the first time that she had complimented me even in that half handed way, and I was surprised.

"I thought you did not allow me the possession of any desirable quality whatsoever," I said.

"You are improving," she replied. "Perhaps it is due to my society. I may yet make you a loyal follower of King George and save you from the hangman."

HILL'S PACIFIC COMMERCE CRAFT.

Each of the huge twin steamships now being built for President James J. Hill of the Great Northern in the quiet town of Groton, opposite New London, Conn., will be three times the size and displacement of the battleship Indiana. When the first photographs of the new vessels were recently shown to President Hill he remarked after passing favorable comment on the progress of their construction:

"These two vessels will revolutionize the carrying trade of the Pacific."

The ocean monsters are in many respects the most interesting and important merchant vessels ever built. No larger ships were ever constructed, and the fact that vessels exceeding by 5,000 tons the gross displacement of the Great Eastern should be built in American yards is of itself significant. The two ships are identical in measurement and construction, each being 630 feet long, 73 feet beam, 56 feet deep and having a mean draft of 33 feet. Their load displacement, total weight of ships and cargo, will be 33,000 tons.

State Superintendent Olsen announces that this winter he will put into practical operation the law passed by the last legislature which provides for union of weak country school districts into one large district, the children to be carried to and from school in carryalls paid for out of the combined district funds. Mr. Olsen declares that it is almost impossible to get people to make the change, notwithstanding the fact that the new system is far preferable to the old methods as regards both economy and convenience. In a country school with a score of scholars, one teacher runs the entire gamut from primer to algebra and consequently is not able to give thorough attention to any one study. By combining districts, more teachers could be employed and the expense would not be any heavier. A saving would also be made in the cost of school houses and furnishings, not to mention the items of light and heat.

The last stick of lumber belonging to the Knapp, Stout & Co. of EauClaire was sawed today and the mills have been closed permanently after being in operation longer than half a century. This is considered by lumbermen as another step toward the desertion of Wisconsin by that interest. Not many years ago this state and its neighbor Michigan were numbered among the largest lumber producing states of the Union. Today the white pine, which first attracted investors, has been almost entirely exhausted.

The Hanseatic, one of the largest life insurance companies of Germany, has found it much to its advantage to maintain, even at a great expense, a number of sanitariums for such of its clients as have developed the beginning of pulmonary tuberculosis. The company pays sick benefits, and has proved that most of the patients are fitted to return to work after a month of open-air treatment, enormously lessening the amounts payable for disability.

In the rush of homestead seekers to El Reno, Okla., last week, one Rock Island railway conductor collected 241 fares on top of passenger coaches on one run, and punched the tickets, too, "without any great discomfort."

In 1900 the Modern Woodmen Society gained in benefit members 109,497, carrying $178,342,500 insurance, and the net gain in local Camps, or lodges, was 1,796.

Postmaster Widenhoefer, of Fisher, has an apple tree in his garden bearing seven large, fine apples. This is something of a novelty for this part of the state. He also has a crab apple tree that is so loaded with fruit that it is necessary to prop up the limbs to keep them from breaking off.

Coscio's Original Italian Orchestra gave a dance at Maccabee hall Tuesday night, and in spite of the fact that it had very little previous advertising, a fair crowd gathered, and the event proved very enjoyable for all participants. Fortier-Paul.

Wednesday morning at 6:30 while the larks were sweetly chirping their moring lay, and as the sun in splendor was just peeping over the arbor-lined hill tops, Mr. Joseph Raymond Fortier and Miss Victoria Olympe Paul were making the solemn marriage vows before the Rev. E. Fayolle at St. Joseph's church, in the presence of near relatives, and a few intimate friends. After the ceremony, the bridal party went to Paul's Hotel, the home of the bride's parents, where a wedding breakfast was served. The early hour was selected to enable the happy couple to catch the east bound train at Dugdale, whence they departed on their wedding tour.

The groom is a son of Commissioner Fortier of Gentilly, and a merchant of this city: the bride, one of Red Lake Falls' fairest flowers, is a daughter, of Mine host Paul, of Paul's hotel.

A reception will be tendered the newly married pair at Forester hall Monday night, by the allied men's and ladies' societies of Catholic Foresters.

CORNER SOFT COAL

BITUMINOUS TRUST GOBBLING UP ALL OTHER NORTHWESTERN DEALERS.

Important Decision In Land Case by Judge Lochren—Hoboes Very Troublesome at Sleepy Eye—Wisconsin and Minnesota Artillery Contest Arranged—Board of Control Buys Coal. General State News.

Minneapolis, Aug. 8.—The Pittsburg Coal company, otherwise known as the bituminous coal combine, has secured a controlling interest in the soft coal business of the Northwest by acquiring the Pioneer Fuel company and the Youghiogheny and Lehigh company. These two companies control 60 per cent of the business in this section. The combine is negotiating for and will probably secure the Northwestern Fuel and the Ohio Coal company, the largest remaining companies. In the event of success only four small independent companies will remain. Heretofore the soft coal business has been handled by individual dealers without any such agreement as to prices as has obtained in the anthracite business. There has been a drop of 30 cents in soft coal within the last two weeks and this is taken to indicate the purpose of the combine to force the small dealers into line.

ENTRIES SUSTAINED.

Important Decision in Land Case Given by Judge Lochren.

Minneapolis, Aug. 6.—Judge Lochren, in the United States court here, decided one of the most important land cases ever heard in the Northwest, involving 15,000 acres of valuable pine lands, and directly and indirectly an immense amount of lands similarly situated elsewhere.

The case is that of John A. Humbird and Frederick Weyerhauser, against Waldo A. Avery and 50 others, involving the right of the Northern Pacific road, from which the plaintiffs secured their title, to an indemnity selection in this county north and east of Duluth upon which settlers had been permitted to enter by the department of the Interior. It is a victory for the entry men after they had lost the battle on their main point, which involved the question of whether the eastern terminus of the road was at Duluth or Ashland, the supreme court deciding that the terminus was at Ashland, after the interior department had decided that it was in Duluth, and that the road was not entitled to grants east of Duluth.

HOBOES ASSAULT YOUNG LADY.

Girl Boldly Attacked in the Center of City at Sleepy Eye.

Sleepy Eye, Minn., Aug. 11.—At 9 o'clock this evening, within one block of the center of this city, three hoboes assaulted a young lady and attempted to throw her down. Her screams attracted attention at once and several gentlemen ran to her assistance. The hoboes scattered in the excitement, but ex-Chief of Police Hicks ran them down and turned them over to Marshal Frantz, who locked them up in the calaboose and placed a guard around the building to prevent their escape.

Hoboes have been a menace to the town for the past several weeks and numerous minor crimes are laid at their door. The men arrested do not give any names and they will be arraigned before the police court in the morning. Several people were within call at the time of the assault, but the darkness prevented them from seeing just what was going on.

ARTILLERY CONTEST.

Minnesota and Wisconsin Batteries to Meet at Camp Lakeview, Minn.

Milwaukee, Aug. 8.—Captain C. F. Ludington of Battery A, Wisconsin National Guard, has accepted a challenge from Major George C. Lambert of the First artillery of Minnesota to an artillery contest between the two states to be held at Camp Lakeview, Minn., in September. The exact date is to be fixed within a few days. The challenge to the Wisconsin battery said there was a range of 2,500 yards at the camp and each team was to use its own guns, which are 3 2-10-inch breech loading steel pieces; shells to be of the 13 1-2 pound plug variety, with smokeless or black powder. A regulation artillery land target, 10 by 20 feet is suggested. The challenge has been approved by the adjutant general of each state.

Coal at Confidential Price.

St. Paul, Aug. 10.—The state board of control yesterday closed a contract for 40,000 tons of coal. The board previously rejected all of the bids offered for furnishing the coal because they showed too great a uniformity of price in each grade. The contract was closed at a figure much below that of the lowest bidder in the competition. Neither the name of the contractor nor the price was announced by the board, in accordance with an agreement made with the dealer.

Attempted to Board Moving Train.

Appleton, Minn., Aug. 13.—While attempting to board a moving train a stranger, whose name is supposed to be Fritz Schultz, fell under the wheels and was instantly killed. There was nothing to identify him except a letter, dated in 1891, stating that he had been employed in the mills at Kerkhoven, Minn. He was poorly dressed and was apparently about 45 years old.

N. P. LAND DECISION.

Commissioner Hermann on Rights of Minnesota Settlers.

Washington, Aug. 5.—Binger Hermann, commissioner of the general land office, has rendered his decision concerning the rights of a large number of settlers and homesteaders in Northern Minnesota.

These settlers originally located on the second indemnity belt of the Northern Pacific railroad land grants. They were never given patents, and had to give up their lands under a decision of the secretary of the interior.

Under the provisions of an act passed at the last session of congress, all settlers who had thus been compelled to forfeit their lands are entitled to take up homesteads, and are not required to reside thereon or pay the commutation price.

There are quite a number of the settlers who wish to make entry on the Red Lake reservation lands, and when their applications have been presented the register and receiver at the Crookston land office have required them to advertise their entry for six weeks, and then make an additional trip to the local land office, when their final receipt and certificate is given.

The settlers did not like this and petitioned for a modification of the rulings of the Crookston land office.

In his decision Commissioner Hermann holds that all who had paid up, either by residence or the commutation price on the Northern Pacific lands, are entitled now to an entry without any delay whatever. The others who had not proved up or paid up, will be credited with whatever time or money they had expended during the time they were possessed of the railroad lands, and must then prove up in the ordinary way.

LARGE BARN BURNED.

Building on Percheron Horse Farm Near Cazenovia.

Pipestone, Minn., Aug. 10.—The large frame barn on the Minnesota Percheron horse farm near Cazenovia, this county, was struck by lightning last night and burned to the ground. All the contents were saved except about 3,500 bushels of oats and 90 tons of hay. The property was owned by the Paine Lumber company of Oshkosh, Wis. The loss will amount to about $8,000.

She Wanted to Die.

Worthington, Minn., Aug. 10.—Mrs. Mary Norman, aged 53, a widow, attempted today to commit suicide. She drew a butcher knife across her throat and cut a gash three inches in length. Eight stitches were required to close the wound. She will live. She brooded over the theft on Monday of $200, which she had been six years in saving.

MacArthur to Command.

St. Paul, Aug. 6.—A semi-official and trustworthy report is current here that General Arthur MacArthur, formerly adjutant general of the department of Dakota, will soon be placed in command of the department. General MacArthur is now on his way home from the Philippines. He will arrive at San Francisco within a few days.

Minnesota Census Statistics.

Washington, Aug. 9.—The census bureau has issued a bulletin on the sex, general nativity and color of the population of Minnesota. That state has 934,490 males and 818,904 females; 1,246,076 native born and 505,313 foreign born; total white 1,737,036, including 1,232,101 native born.

Elevator Struck by Lightning.

Worthington, Minn., Aug. 9.—Skemis & Moen's elevator here was struck by lightning during the night and entirely burned. The heavy rain and good work of the fire department saved adjacent buildings. Loss, $25,000.

LOSE GOVERNMENT AID.

Three Hundred Indians at Fort Yates, N. D., Become Self-Supporting.

Fort Yates, N. D., Aug. 13.—The treaty of 1878 with the Indians stipulated that the government would provide them sustenance until such a time as they should become self-supporting. Now, after nearly a quarter of a century, Uncle Sam concludes during this period some of his wards upon the Standing Rock reservation should have become self-supporting. Consequently the interior department instructs Indian Agent Bingenheimer to discontinue issuing rations to those whom in his estimation are deemed able to support themselves.

As a result 300 names were stricken from the rolls. Of this number 32 are white men married to Indian women, being all the whites living on the reservation. The rations of only one full blood Indian were stopped. Others will be discontinued from time to time.

COMMISSIONERS ENJOINED.

South Dakota Railroad Case Decided in Favor of Roads.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Aug. 11.—Judge Carland of the United States court has filed his decision in the now celebrated South Dakota railroad rate case. His decision says:

"The schedule of maximum rates of charges for the transportation of freight and passengers adopted, fixed and established by the board of railroad commissioners of South Dakota is held to be in violation of the Constitution of the United States in this, to-wit: that the schedule, if enforced, would operate to take the property of the railroad without just compensation and without due process of law and would deprive it of the equal protection of the law."

Don't be satisfied with temporary relief from indigestion. Kodol Dyspepsia Cure permanently and completely removes the complaint. It relieves permanently because it allows the tired stomach perfect rest. Dieting won't rest the stomach. Nature receives supplies from the food we eat. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and he said, 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told him to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured." Astounded The Editor:

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bennettsville, S. C., was once immensely surprised. "Through long suffering from Dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength or vigor and suffered great distress from her stomach, but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well, can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Stomach and Liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50c at W. A. The Clerk's First Defeat.

The local Clerk's base ball team left Sunday morning feeling good over their previous victories, having played three games and won them all with the thought of meeting the Thief River Falls Sports at their home diamond, but not "overly much filled with confidence in themselves of making this their fourth successive victory." After being treated to a square at mine host Robeckke's, the "high flying clerks" went to the Indian reservation to find a diamond on which to receive their first massacre, and they got it proper, allowing the Thief River Falls aggregation to take seventeen scalps to their seven.

Well, the whole story is that it was a day off for the Clerks, only one good play being made by them, and that an accident—"Kid" Schusser catching a hot liner on his bare right hand from the front of a stick swung by Coenen. The pitcher let a roller climb his arm somewhat in a "Billy climb-u the pole" style The right fielder turned a summersault on the ball and couldn't find it. One of the pitchers was too tall to bend low enough to stop a roller. The short stop thought the ball was a foot ball and struck at it with his club in the "one, two, three style." The catcher thought he was playing anti-over with the first base man, and had to give the customary yell, "pig's tail" once when he did not throw hard enough. One of the Sports thought the center fielder looked quiet and sleepy, so he sent him a fly just over his head to see how quick he could throw. The first baseman comes in with the rest of the players with a hold stab to reach at a ball that stopped almost at second base, at the same time trying to keep his foot on his own bag. The left fielder, not getting batted flies enough in his field, entertained himself by catching the winged flies. But now we must also mention the only player who didn't make an error, and he was the player with the Japanese bloomers who played upon the bench.

However the Clerks testify that they were most hospitably treated at the hands of Thief River Falls Sports and say they will surely play them again.

The ten men mentioned as the Clerks are: Lemieux, Ittner, Lambert, Brady, Schusser, Koke, Plante, Richard, Poirier, Robillard.

All Should Know It.

A woman has been through the state for two or three years past collecting money, as she says, for a Children's Home in Minneapolis; sometimes she calls it a German Home. Her name is Mrs. Harp, and it is a well known fact that she does not represent any Children's Home or anything that is in any way a charity. She has a private lying in place where girls go in times of confinement, paying for their care.

There is no board of responsible persons or organization in charge of the affair: it is wholly a private matter and whatever money she obtains she uses as she pleases.

We repeatedly find that persons who have not taken the pains to look into the matter have given her money, supposing that they were giving to the work of the Children's Home Society of Minnesota. It has been stated by some persons that she has had our literature in her possession and has given them the impression that she had come in the place of our Rev. D. B. Jackson, who died awhile ago, so that they were the more easily misled.

All the authorized representatives of the society have credentials and its friends are earnestly requested to see to it that they give money for the work only to such authorized representatives.

Otter Tail County Oats Story.

Fergus Falls Journal: Bronson Strain came in from Battle Lake Friday morning and reports something real phenomenal in the shape of a grain yield. Nels Anderson who resides near that village received 29 pounds of Norway oats from a friend this spring and planted it on a half acre of land as an experiment. Conditions were favorable and the oats grew and grew. At the time of cutting the heads were long and heavy and the oats large and of fine quality. The threshing occurred this week, and the half acre yielded 85 bushels of the choice oats, which means 170 bushels to the acre. They would have shown up even stronger than this, but Mr. Anderson saved two or three sheaves to take to the state fair.

Iron in Red Lake Country.

The reports of quantities of iron ore being found in the Red Lake country have been conclusively demonstrated by Messrs. Faulkner and Peebles, who returned to Thief River Falls last Wednesday after more than a week spent in exploration. They thoroughly examined the shores of both lakes and found indications of iron everywhere abundant, especially in the springs north of Buena Vista near the divide. At one spring in that locality Mr. Faulkner, having no other receptacle, filled his stocking with sand which was very rich in iron of fine quality. The iron which he exhibited at Thief River Falls, Mr. Faulkner is convinced, comes from a large mother loud in the watershed from whence the spring takes its origin.

Mr. Faulkner is enthusiastic and proceeded at once to Crookston where he will make arrangements to put crews and men to work in the field by way of Solway. Borings will be made at the distance of one mile from one another over the whole territory or until the main load is located.

To the Public.

As certain parties of this city have been circulating reports in regard to the proposed hiring of the band leader by our city council, which are not only false in every respect, but are evidently intended to injure the writer, I take this method of explaining to the people of Red Lake Falls the true situation. The report has been circulated that the band leader who was to be engaged was a cigar maker, and that I was to greatly profit by the fact that he was to receive a monthly salary from the city as band instructor. The inference being of course that the man secured would work so much cheaper in my factory. The man whom the band men of this city had in view as an instructor never saw the inside of a cigar factory, but is a photographer by trade, so it seems unnecessary to remark further than to say that the reports are false in every particular and evidently circulated by parties who are either looking for a subject of gossip or are opposed to seeing a respectable musical organization in the city. For the benefit of those interested, I will state that instead of the band instructor working in my factory, it has been my intention of securing a first class man who would also be an addition to the band, and that at increased wages over what is usually paid in cigar factories.

Signed.
J. B. Armstrong.

May Search Buggies.

Deputy game wardens have the right to search buggies driven by persons suspected of killing game illegally. This is the view of Attorney General Douglas, who was consulted by telephone from Cambridge, Minn. Two strangers drove into that town with guns in their buggy. They had evidently been hunting chickens, and the warden wanted to look into the buggy. They ordered him away and made such demonstration that he decided to ascertain how much law he had on his side before making the arrest.

A Resolution.

Minneapolis, Minn., August 13, 1901.

At a special meeting of the G. A. R. Post and Past Post Commanders Association of Minneapolis held at Department Headquarters, August 12th, the following resolution was unanimously adopted.

Whereas: It has become customary for all railroad lines, controlling the passenger traffic of the Northwest, at the time of the Annual National Encampment of the G. A. R., to pool their issues and fix rates in excess of those granted to many other organizations to the great detriment of the soldier and his friends, thereby preventing many of them from enjoying a reunion of old comrades, which to them in their declining years, means so much, and can occur but a few times more, and

Whereas: All the roads but one leading from the Northwest have formed a pool and fixed a rate far in excess of one cent a mile—a rate given by all roads east of Chicago, and

Whereas: Believing that the old soldiers, by reason of their former service to this country, are entitled to all the privileges granted to other people, and that great injustice is done them by fixing rates that will prevent them from attending the Cleveland Encampment without great sacrifice, and

Whereas: Our only friend, the Soo Line, has again come to our rescue and offered a rate that all can afford, namely one cent a mile, and a route that being part rail and part water, excells all others in enjoyment, comfort, and pleasure, and lands us in Cleveland rested and improved, well prepared to enjoy all the pleasures of the encampment, therefore be it

Resolved: That we owe the Soo Line the deepest gratitude for the effort they are making in our behalf at this time, as well as our thanks for the noble stand they have taken in all former encampments held on lines reached by them, and that we believe it to be the duty of everyone to show his appreciation by patronizing the Soo to the fullest extent and we hereby pledge ourselves to use our best endeavor in giving the "Soo" a full train and a joyful crowd.

Signed,
A. H. Nelson,
President Commanders Association.

Secretary Commanders Association.

Dance a Success.

One of the most pleasant social affairs of the season was the dance at the opera house last Friday evening given by the Select base ball club of this city. The dance was gotten up for the purpose of raising funds with which to pay off the standing debts of the club, and it certainly proved to be a great financial success. Fifty-seven tickets were sold, bringing in a dollar a piece. The watch contest brought in $97.40. Miss Buse was the successful contestant, having secured 516 votes, while Miss Newton had 458 votes. The team this season payed off a debt of $72.00 from last year and is now only $18.00 in debt, which small amount will be paid by occasional social hops to be given in the Maccabee this winter, and next spring the club can start out fresh, without a burden of debts, more than any local management can say for the previous five or six years. The net proceeds of the dance were $116.00. Music was furnished by a seven piece orchestra of local talent, and was as good as any music ever furnished in this city.

Baby Girl Eats Morphine Pellets.

Sleyton, Minn., Aug. 16.—The 2-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Gullord, while playing about the room, pulled open the bureau drawer, took therefrom a vial of morphine pellets, and, unobserved by the attendant, ate them all. All efforts on the part of the physicians to rescue the little one from the fatal sleep were unavailing.

St. Paul, Aug. 13.—Emil Herman, employed on a steam sand pump at the foot of Wacouta street, met a horrible death about 9 a. m. Caught in the machinery of the pump, he was whirled about a windlass, his body beating the deck, until his left arm and left leg were torn from the trunk.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlein's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev. A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlein's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and he said, 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told him to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured." HEALTH OFFICIALS ASK THE CO-OPERATION OF LUMBERMEN PARTICULARLY.

Harvest Hands on a Milwaukee Train Held Up—Immense Amount of Land Available in the Duluth District. Peculiar Will of a Wealthy Rice County Farmer—Minnesota Census Statistics—General State News.

Duluth, Aug. 14.—Health officials, lumbermen and civic authorities met here during the day to discuss means for stamping out smallpox in the Northwest. The meeting was a large one, men from all over Minnesota and Wisconsin being present.

Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the Minnesota state board of health, who called the meeting, urged upon the lumbermen the necessity for their co-operation in stamping out the disease. Vaccination, isolation and disinfection he declared to be the three things necessary for stamping it out, and his ideas, which were embraced in a set of resolutions, met with unanimous approval.

The resolutions state, among other things, that compulsory vaccination be required of all men working in lumber camps or for railroads. Camps in which smallpox existed last year will be fumigated and disinfected, and agents appointed by the state will visit the various localities and see that the compulsory order is complied with.

HELD UP HARVESTERS.

Daring Robbery on Board a Milwaukee Freight Train.

St. Paul, Aug. 14.—One of the most daring holdups and robberies ever attempted in this state was pulled off between Red Wing and Hastings during the early hours of the morning on the Milwaukee railroad.

Four men, masked and armed, boarded a freight train that left La Crosse at 3 a. m., and robbed every man on the train before it reached Hastings.

On the freight were 40 to 50 men, all laborers bound for Dakota fields. The robbers started in at the rear car and went from one car to the other. They went from man to man and took everything that he had. Pocket knives, razors, watches, rings, pocketbooks, notebooks, tickets, money, in fact anything that a man had on his person. Not a man dared resist. The robbers threatened their victims with instant death if they so much as moved.

LANDS FOR HOMES.

An Area as Large as Massachusetts Available in Duluth District.

Duluth, Aug. 14.—There are over 8,000 square miles—5,283,000 acres—of vacant and unappropriated land in the United States land district of Duluth. This is a tract larger than the state of Massachusetts. It lies close to Duluth, none of it more than 150 miles away, and yet it is inhabited by a few Indians and occasional trappers and woodsmen.

It is no desolate region. There are several thousand square miles of valuable timber lands, pine, spruce and hard woods; there are hundreds of square miles of rich agricultural lands that will yield large crops, and there are areas of great extent known to be rich in minerals.

ORDERED HIS MONEY BURNED.

Peculiar Will of a Wealthy Minnesota Farmer.

Faribault, Minn., Aug. 14.—The funeral of Harvey Scott, an eccentric farmer who resided east of Faribault, occurred during the day. He was 81 years old and had no family, his wife having died about two years ago.

He was quite wealthy, and left a will making a few small bequests and directing that after his funeral expenses were paid, all his money, amounting to about $45,000, should be burned by his executor.

It is needless to add that the request will not be complied with. Scott has a nephew living in this city.

Minnesota Census Statistics.

Washington, Aug. 14.—The fifth of the series of census bulletins on the school, militia and voting ages was issued during the day, the present group comprising Michigan, Minnesota and Mississippi. It shows that Minnesota has 612,990 persons of school age including 309,620 males, 562,611 native born and 608,547 white; males of militia age 399,734, including 234,386 native born and total white, 396,315; males of voting age 506,744, of whom 245,768 are native born and total white 502,384.

"Through the months of June and July our baby was teething and took a running off of the bowels and sickness of the stomach," says O. P. M. Holliday, of Deming, Ind. GOOD ROADS.

One county in Indiana is spending no less than $30,000 on road improvements this year. Their roads are fair now, but they want them better, and accordingly are paving several miles with macadom, rightly figuring that good roads are prime essentials to a prosperous community. Red Lake county could use twice $30,000 on road-improvement without a close approach to perfection. Indeed, the conditions of our roads are so bad that if viewed from a casual standpoint, the case seems almost hopeless. Here at home we have an illustration of how bad roads can get. There is scarcely a decent drive leading from the city, with the exception of the road leading east "between the rivers." In all other directions, such a series of chuck-holes and rough roadways, or of mud in wet weather, is presented as would discourage the most weather beaten and experienced wayfarer. Is there no remedy? Is this condition to go on indefinitely? The present system of township roadwork is a failure. Patches of work are attempted here and there, those engaged in the work generally having two objects in view—working off their road tax, and getting through with the least possible exertion. Farmers barely ever have time to properly look after the road work--an off day here and there being put into it, without system or method, and the results speak for themselves.

Now, this road question is closely linked with that all important one of drainage. Properly graded roads furnish drainage ditches alongside. The vast amount annually lost by lack of proper drainage if rightly utilized would soon put in a system of ditches and good roads.

A prominent farmer discussing this question said to The Gazette the other day: "I have no crop this year. I had a poor crop last year and a light one the year before. My land is flat, not drained. I have lost in the past three years no less than $3000 on my crops—enough to construct a good drainage ditch itself." That is only an example of the losses being sustained from lack of proper drainage.

The Indiana plan of township roads might well be adopted here.

A civil engineer is employed to estimate the cost of grading every road in the township, with ditches in connection. 20-year 5 per cent. bonds are then voted to cover the bonds, the work is let by contract to the lowest bidder, and the result is a fine road and ditch system at the least possible expense. The Indiana plan might well be tried here in Red Lake county. Once in vogue, the villages and cities of the county would soon forge ahead on business taken from rival places located in districts with poor roads.

Saturday The Crookston Times appeared in its new "dress" for the first time—that is, it was printed for the initial time from new type. Along with the new type from which the news matter is printed are new advertising faces, borders, heading for the paper, date lines and other things which make it one of the finest appearing papers of the state.

The verdict as rendered when the Barry jury first appeared, contained the surplus statement that they had found Barry "sane" in addition to being guilty and it was necessary for them to retire and bring in a new verdict, in which the opinion on Barry's sanity had been eliminated.

A young man of Peoria, Ill., has lost his power of speech because of drinking ice water in hot days.

WATER WORKS.

Red Lake Falls needs nothing so bad as a system of sewerage and water works. Two years ago an attempt was made to pass a state law under which this city would be enabled to proceed with putting in such a system. The bill did not become a law, and we are just where we were on the important question. If the city is not in a position to proceed, would it be best to wait on indefinitely, or would the wiser plan be to encourage private enterprise to come to the rescue. It is an important question and might profitably be taken up by our citizens and discussed at this time. The scattered condition of the city presents a serious problem. But a system taking in the main business and residence portion could be figured on as a starter. The benefits would be two fold—directly from the practical use of the system, and indirectly from the tendency to concentrate where the convenience of the system could be taken advantage of. The Gazette is open to a discussion of the question.

MY CAPTIVE.

BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

AUTHOR OF "A SOLDIER OF MANHATTAN," "THE SUN OF SARATOGA," ETC.

I had my doubts about the "loyalty," which is a term devised for the protection of sovereigns in their crimes, but I said nothing just then. She, too, said nothing more. The heap of coals grew and glowed in the depths with deep crimsons and scarlets, throwing out a generous heat and wooing me to sleep. Despite my sense of caution and the efforts of my will, my eyelids drooped. The castles in the coals became more indistinct and wavered as if they were made of red mist.

Old Put whinnied again and raised his head high in the air like one who listens. I was wide awake in an instant and on my feet again.

"Put," I said, "if I find that you have given a false alarm a second time you shall have nothing to eat in the morning."

"I wouldn't bother about it," said the girl. "It's only a squirrel or a rabbit. Any horse would notice the passing of such an animal. Their senses are keener than ours."

She was growing very considerate of me!

But I searched the wood again, and finding nothing returned to my old and comfortable place. Old Put was restless and shuffled about; but, angry at his idle alarms, I commanded him roughly to keep quiet, and he obeyed.

The girl was humming softly to herself as if she were thinking of her far-away English home. I supposed she was lonely and homesick, and again some pity for her crept into my heart.

"Are you singing of your sweetheart?" I asked, meaning to cheer her up.

"I have none," she replied.

"Not now perhaps, but you will have some day."

"That is a different matter."

"What kind of a sweetheart would you choose?"

"A soldier, a gallant English soldier, one loyal to his king through all."

She continued to hum her little song, whatever it was. Something stirred in the wood, and Old Put, despite my previous command, whinnied and stamped his feet.

"Confound that beast, whatever it may be!" I said. "It must be a wildcat attracted by the light of our fire."

"Let the wildcat go," she said. "Listen and I will sing you a song that will tell you what my future betrothed and husband shall be. It's an old Scotch song of devotion and loyalty, but we English sing it, too, and like it as well as the Scotch. 'Dumbarton's Drums' we call it."

"Sing," I said.

Then she sang:

"Dumbarton's drums beat bonnie O,
When they mind me of my dear Johnnie O!
How happy am I
When my soldier is by,
While he kisses and blesses his Annie O!
'Tis a soldier alone can delight me O,
For his graceful looks do invite me O.
While guarded in his arms
I'll fear no war's alarms,
Neither danger nor death shall e'er fright me O!

"My love is a handsome laddie O,
Genteel, but ne'er foppish nor gaudy O!
Though commissions are dear,
Yet I'll buy him one this year,
For he'll serve no longer a cadie O!
A soldier has honor and bravery O,
Unacquainted with rogues and their knavery O!
He minds no other thing
But the ladies or the king,
For every other care is but slavery O!

"Then I'll be the captain's lady O!
Farewell, all my friends and my daddy O!
I'll wait no more at home,
But I'll follow with the drum,
And whene'er that beats I'll be ready O!
Dumbarton's drums sound bonnie O!
They are sprightly like my dear Johnnie O!
How happy shall I be
When on my soldier's knee,
And he kisses and blesses his Annie O!"

Her voice was deep and true, and the old war ballad was music in my ears. As the melody rose and fell in the lonely night my eyes drooped again and my brain became dim with advancing slumbers like a child soothed to sleep by the song of his mother. I was as tired as a dog. I had ridden long and far and had worked much, and every nerve and muscle in me cried aloud for rest, but I roused myself as she finished and the last note of her song died in the darkness.

"That is a proper military song," I said, "and nobly sung, but I object to the sentiments of your hero. He minds no other thing but the ladies or the king. The ladies are all right, but no king! Leave the king out!"

Old Put was stamping his feet again.

"That's right, Put," I said. "Applaud the song, for it was well sung, though you and I, who are good Americans, don't altogether like the sentiments. That, I take it, is an old song of loyalty to the Stuarts. It is a singular thing to me how wholesome minded English people can invest the Stuarts, whom they kicked out of their country, with so much romance and charm when all history shows they were an utterly debased lot, and nobody knows it better than the English themselves."

"The sentiments of the song, king and all, are perfectly correct, and I'll sing that verse to you again."

She looked at me with a look half of defiance, half a smile, and sang:

"My love is a handsome laddie O,
Genteel, but ne'er foppish nor gaudy O!
Though commissions are dear,
Yet I'll buy him one this year,
For he'll serve no longer a cadie O!
A soldier has honor and bravery O,
Unacquainted with rogues and their knavery O!
He minds no other thing
But the ladies or the king,
For every other care is but a slavery O!"

She sang it still more softly and gently than before, and, though my eyelids drooped again, I turned my eyes from the bed of coals to her face. The firelight played ruddily over her eyes and cheeks, and the expression there seemed tender and faraway, as if her thoughts had gone from this dark night and the war torn fields of South Carolina to the green English meadows and peaceful sunshine.

When she finished, I raised my hands and clapped them together.

"Well done!" I said. "Well done!"

"Done well enough for us," said some one, and strong hands reached over the log and grasped me by the wrists. My languor and my sleepiness were gone in an instant, and I made a powerful effort to wrench myself loose, but I had been taken too suddenly. Three or four men flung themselves upon me, and I was crushed under a great weight, while the firm grip was still on my wrists. I managed to deal somebody a heavy kick and heard a grunt of pain, but in a few seconds I was overpowered and, like a wise man, ceased to struggle further.

Singularly enough, one of my early thoughts in that moment was of relief that Old Put should prove not to be a false prophet, having enjoyed such a good character in that respect so long. I had been a fool not to take his warning more seriously. Then I wondered why the girl did not cry out at the sight of struggling men and the sound of oaths and blows, a violent medley usually very terrifying to women. I caught one glimpse of her, and she was sitting on the log, her back against the up thrust bough, leaning upon it as lazily as if she were in a rocking chair in a parlor. The firelight still played over her face and eyes, but the soft and tender expression which had pleased me was gone. Instead the look that she turned upon me was a mixture of dislike, malice and triumph.

After meeting such a glance it was a relief to me to look another way and see who had captured me.

CHAPTER V.

A CHANGE OF FRONT.

"Truss him up good," said one. "These rebels are not to be trusted even when they are tied."

I gave careful notice to the man who spoke, evidently the leader of the party. He was of middle size, middle age and truculent features. His most noticeable characteristic was his drooping eyelids, which would induce the casual observer to think he was fast asleep, though in reality he was wide awake. He was dressed in the uniform of a captain in the British army. I set him down as a partisan chief on a small scale. He had five comrades, cast in the same mold as himself, all dressed in British soldiers' uniforms and rather wild of look.

They bound me securely and set me with my back to the log and my face to the fire, much in the position that I had occupied while the girl was singing. Confound her for lulling away my caution and suspicions in such a manner! I had no doubt now that she had seen the red uniforms of the British when first I went into the wood to search for the cause of the noise. I was a fool to let my distrust of her decrease for a moment.

"That was a complete job, Miss Howard," said the leader, "well done by everybody, and your part is the best done of all."

"You have rescued me from the hands of a rebel, Captain Crowder," she replied, "and I am back with my own people, for both of which I thank you."

I thought it was time for me to say something.

"It is true you have trapped me between you, Captain Crowder, for so I hear the lady call you," I said, "but I wouldn't exult, because the next chance might be mine, and it would hurt your feelings for me to pay you back."

"I don't know about any next chance for you," he said, "because here in the south we generally hang rebels."

I did not reply to his threat, thinking that I had said enough, and turned my head away. My glance fell now upon Old Put. His eyes were full of reproach to me. The I told you so expression was there, and the I am sorry for you and myself expression was mingled with it. "I will never lose faith in you again, best of all comrades!" I signaled back.

Captain Crowder, having seized me, also seized my camp, evidently with the intention of spending the night there, and he posted one sentinel, while the others sat around the fire, making themselves comfortable. The girl occupied her old seat on the tree trunk, leaning against the projecting bough.

"Do you know where my father is, Captain Crowder?" she asked.

"With Tarleton," he replied.

"And where is Tarleton?"

"Hot on the chase of the rebel major and his men."

"Can we overtake Tarleton by noon tomorrow?"

"Undoubtedly, for he has to go rather slowly, not knowing just where Morgan is. He doesn't want to run past the game. Morgan's hard to catch, but when Tarleton once comes up with him there'll be an end to one rebel army."

I listened to this conversation with the closest attention and continued to listen while he described Tarleton's movements, force and equipment. If I could escape him and the hangman's rope with which he had threatened me, this information would be of great value to us. I was glad that, for the sake of precaution, I had torn up the girl's letters and other written facts about us when I captured her, for now she could rely only upon speech. I waited for her to tell Crowder about us, but she said nothing upon that point, and I reflected that her reticence was natural, as she would want to give her information herself to Tarleton, and thus secure all the credit instead of letting the guerrilla, Crowder, claim at least half of it.

Two of the men disappeared in the wood and returned in a few moments, leading the horses of the band, which they tethered to the trees near by. I guessed that they had seen the light of our fire at a distance and leaving their horses there had crept upon me.

"You will excuse us, Miss Howard, while we eat and drink a little," said Crowder. "We've ridden far today, and we're tired and hungry."

Their appearance was sufficient indication that they needed food and rest, for the grime of travel was thick upon them. They rummaged their haversacks and saddlebags and produced bread and meat, which they began to eat greedily. They were absorbed like wild animals in their repast and paid no attention to anything else.

The girl rose and walked over to me. Reaching down, she seized the end of my silk handkerchief, which was projecting from my pocket, and jerked it forth. She threw it into the fire and watched it burn, the red heat gripping the delicate silk and converting it in a moment to ashes. Then she turned upon me a face of flame.

"You dared to bind me," she said—"you a rebel and I an English woman, the daughter of a loyal English officer! You dared to insult me so!"

"And I presume that is the reason you burn the handkerchief with which I bound you," I said.

"Yes."

"Now that you have begun the job of burning I suppose you would like to burn me, too, as I am the man who tied the handkerchief, and I did so because you deserved it."

She was silent, but her cheeks were as red as ever.

"I congratulate you upon your rescue, your rescuers, your company," I said.

"They are loyal British soldiers."

"They wear the British uniform. Any ruffian and robber may do that."

"I have seen Captain Crowder himself in the army of Cornwallis. My father knows him, and I do too."

"You know his face, and that is all. He may be a good enough British soldier when he is with Cornwallis, but elsewhere he is anything that suits his purpose. Look at him and his comrades now."

Every man had produced a bottle and was drinking deeply from it. The odor rose and was too strong to be swept away by the wind.

"Look at them," I repeated. "I congratulate you on your company."

They drank deeply and replaced their bottles in their pockets, where I was sure they were not destined to remain long. The red fled from the girl's face, but she said nothing, and giving me the same curious look of mingled triumph and defiance went back to her old place on the log. There she sat, staring straight into the fire, as if she were wholly oblivious of me and the other men around her.

The partisans were in great glee. They laughed and cracked rough jokes, and presently, as I had expected, pulled out the bottles again and took a long, deep draft, once, twice, thrice. Their faces flushed from the effect of the strong spirits, and the loudness and roughness of their talk increased. Crowder, the leader, was the loudest and roughest of them all.

"That was a fine song you sang to that fellow there when you set him a-napping for us to catch, Miss Howard," he said presently, "and we have music, too, don't we boys?"

"Yes, yes!" they roared, all together.

"And won't you kindly sing that song or another as good for us, Miss Howard?" he continued.

She made no answer, staring straight at the red embers, her cheeks pale.

"I say, Miss Howard, don't you hear?" exclaimed Crowder roughly.

"Yes, I hear," she replied, "but I'm sorry I can't oblige you. I can't sing any more."

"If you can sing for that d——d rebel there," continued Crowder, "I should think you could sing for us, who are good and loyal English like yourself."

She was silent again.

"Didn't we rescue you?" he continued. "Aren't we your saviors? Don't you owe us gratitude?"

Still unanswered, he swore an oath and said to his comrades:

"Here's gratitude for you, lads. Well, if she won't sing for us, we can sing for her. How do you like this, my lady? It's called 'I'll Owre the Muir to Maggy,' and it goes very well with the song that you sang."

Then he sang the old song, which, like the girl's, was Scotch:

"And I'll owre the muir to Maggy—
Her wit and sweetness call me—
There to my fair I'll show my mind.
Whatever may befall me.
If she loves mirth, I'll learn to sing,
Or, likes the Nine to follow,
I'll lay my lugs in Pindus' spring
And invocate Apollo.

"If she admire a martial mind,
I'll sheath my limbs in armor;
If to the softer dance inclined,
With gayest airs I'll charm her;
If she love grandeur day and night,
I'll plot my nation's glory,
Find favor in my prince's sight
And shine in future story.

"Beauty can work wonders with ease
Where wit is corresponding,
And bravest men know best to please
With complaisance abounding.
My bonnie Maggy love can turn
Me to what shape she pleases
If in her breast that flame shall burn
Which in my bosom blazes."

His voice was not unmusical, and he had some idea of rhythm and measure. His comrades joined him, and they roared out a chorus which must have penetrated to the farthest edge of the wood.

"I'll not only sing for you, Miss Howard," said Crowder, "but I'll dance for you too."

It was plain enough that the man was drunk and was relapsing into his natural condition of savagery. I hoped that he would fall into the fire, but he did not. His drunken head swayed from side to side, but he kept step to the beat of the song.

One of the men drew his empty bottle and beat upon its side with his knife blade. It made a lively tinkle that sounded like music, and the others, seeing his success, imitated him. Crowder had not only a vocal but an instrumental chorus as well. His zeal increased, and he danced like an Indian at a scalp dance, while the men roared out the song and beat their bottles with enthusiasm.

"Again I congratulate you on your company, your glorious band of rescuers, Miss Howard," I called out to her.

I know she heard me, but she did not reply. Her lips were set firmly, but her cheeks were growing paler and paler, and she seemed to be white to the hair. I tugged at my bonds, but I could not move them.

The song stopped for a moment, and Crowder, looking around for further amusement, spied me.

"A good song, boys, and good fun," he cried, "but here's better fun. Let's hang the prisoner and see him squirm."

The others, as drunk as their leader, shouted their approval, but the girl sprang up.

"You shall not do that!" she cried.

"And why not, miss?" asked Crowder. "He is our prisoner."

"Because I will not permit it!" she cried.

They roared with laughter.

"If you do," she said, "I will report your act to Colonel Tarleton. This man is an important prisoner. He can guide Tarleton to Morgan, and he will do it to save his life. He must be taken safely to the British camp. Tarleton will reward you well."

"All right, if you say so, Miss Howard," he said. "Anything to oblige, especially one as handsome as you are. And we won't hang him tonight. Maybe we will do it in the morning anyhow, but that's no reason why we should stop the fun now. A soldier's life is hard, and he ought to make merry while he can."

He took a large flask from his haversack and shared it with his men. Then they began to sing and dance again, all of them wild with drink.

It was an orgy of savages. The fire had died down and ceased to blaze; only the red embers glowed in the darkness. I could feel the blackness of the night which rolled up and encircled us more closely. The girl was as immovable as a statue. Her tawny hair shone in the dim light, and I could see that her face was still white, but that was all.

One of the men fell down presently from sheer exhaustion.

"Let him lie," said Crowder. "He'll sleep as well there as anywhere."

The man never moved, but began to snore, and a second one yielded to exertion and whisky and, stretching himself out on the ground, went to instant sleep. Crowder himself was the third and was followed speedily by the others, including the sentinel, who had joined without objection in the orgy. The six men were sound asleep in a slumber heavy with weariness and liquor.

A last brand fell over in the coals and blazed up. The girl rose from the log, and by its light I could see that her face had turned from white to red. She walked quickly over to me and said in a voice shaking with excitement and

REQUEST DENIED BY HILL.

Pacific Coast Lumbermen Are Turned Down.

New York, Aug. 18.—The request of the Pacific coast lumbermen for lower rates on their product to Missouri and Mississippi river points and Chicago has been denied by President James J. Hill of the Great Northern railway.

The Western lumbermen are seeking a market in the Dakotas, Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri and Oklahoma, all of which territory is tributary to the pine barons of Minnesota, Wisconsin and Michigan in the North, and Texas, Arkansas and Louisiana in the South. These markets are the choicest for all manufacturers west of Chicago, and in the next 10 years will be the richest in the country. The Western lumbermen by dint of cutting have got into North Dakota and Montana markets, but the trade is unprofitable.

To reach the desired markets the lumbermen desire a reduction of 10 and 15 cents per hundred. The present rate from the Pacific coast to Missouri and lower Mississippi points is 50 cents per hundred, to Chicago 50 and to St. Paul and upper Mississippi points 40 cents. The lumbermen desire a reduction to 35 cents to Mississippi river points and a 40-cent rate to Chicago.

President Hill has refused the request on the ground that it would be unprofitable to haul the lumber here at that rate and return the cars empty to Pacific coast points.

PLENTY OF MONEY.

Twin City Banks and Carrying of the Grain Crops.

St. Paul, Aug. 18.—St. Paul and Minneapolis banks are in excellent condition to move the crop of 1901, in the opinion of two well posted authorities.

President J. W. Raymond of the Northwestern National bank, speaking of the question, says:

"The Twin Cities are in an independent financial condition today. The crop can be handled so easily by the banks of the two cities that the task can be performed with the greatest ease. This is a part of the prosperity that exists generally. However, it is remarkable, especially when compared with the past hustling of these cities. The last great crop required the banks of Minneapolis and St. Paul to seek money from Eastern sources. I am of the opinion that Minneapolis and St. Paul today actually have money to the amount of $175,000,000."

"We are looking for a good supply of money this year," said John S. Pillsbury, speaking of the same question, "but such a favorable state of affairs as exist in the Northwest was not looked for. The rate of interest in Minneapolis and St. Paul today is lower than in Chicago. Everything the farmer produces is bringing a good price. With the farmer prosperous and happy, the Northwest is certainly destined to a period of unparalleled prosperity."

NEW GRAIN IS COMING.

Present Week Will Be a Busy One at Duluth.

Duluth, Aug. 20.—A considerable amount of new grain is coming in here, though there is comparatively more barley and oats than wheat. Later in the week the new wheat will be pouring in by the trainloads. The Northern Pacific road has given notice to all shippers over its line that all grain consigned to it at the head of the lake for inspection and subsequent assignment to mill or elevators must be consigned to South Superior, as it has not the track room at Duluth or West Superior to handle and hold any grain there not destined directly for terminals in those points. All South Superior consignments will be rehandled to any other point at the head of the lake without additional charge for switching and moving forward. This puts practically all the receiving yards of all roads at South Superior where there is plenty of low priced yard room.

Astounded The Editor:

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bennetteville, S. C., was once immensely surprised. "Through long suffering from Dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength or vigor and suffered great distress from her stomach, but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well, can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Stomach and Liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50c at W. A. THROUGH THE WILDS.

THE MINNESOTA AND INTERNATIONAL WILL SOON RUN TO BLACKDUCK.

NOW BUILT TO WITHIN ELEVEN MILES OF THAT POINT.

Talk of the beauties of the electric city, the glamor of the myriad attractions of the exposition at Buffalo, but for an all around invigurating, enjoyable outing, give us a trip to Blackduck, with a day's stop at beautiful Bemidji, the wonder of the age, a 15-mile ride on the Minnesota & International to Turtle River, and a wagon trip from that point to Blackduck, by way of Tenstrike. Each town has its history, its hopes and its attractions, and each town a lake or two all for itself. And such lakes! The sun's rays seem to have concentrated on each one, as the waves chase each other and rise up to meet its kisses: the winds soughing through the stately pines seem to be converted into aeoilan like music, and the warmth of the tropics seems to have blended with the rich purity of northern zephyrs to make an atmosphere nector like in its effects: sandy beaches, and water as clear as crystal, where graceful trees flirt with their images trembling.

Now the hand of civilization has taken hold, and cutting a straight away path through the pine forests, the road formerly known as the Brainerd & Northern is being extended northeast from Bemidji, with Koochiching, on the international boundary, as the objective point. The terminus of the road at present is Turtle, on Turtle River Lake, fifteen miles northeast of Bemidji, where a thriving village has sprung up, with perhaps 200 inhabitants. There are several ways of reaching Turtle from Bemidji. One is to take the train every Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, arriving at 7:30 a. m. Another is to take the launch, the "Moose" across Bemidji lake, where connections are made with a fine three seated rig at Turtle landing that carries passengers to Turtle or back for 75c. The charge on the Moose is 25c. Another is to take the Blackduck stage, going up Mondays Wednesdays and Fridays, via Turtle. The favorite way seems to be to walk. The Minnesota & International have the grading nearly completed to Tenstrike, seven miles beyond Turtle, and the steels are already laid more than half way. Officials say the road will run into Tenstrike by Sept. 15. At Tenstrike the weary traveler rests for dinner, and there are two fine hotels, one restaurant, several saloons and general stores. From Tenstrike to Blackduck it is eight miles. The right of way is cleared and some grading has been done, but it is not likely that Blackduck will be reached before the freeze-up this fall. $2.25 per day is being paid to laborers, but there has been a general exodus to the harvest fields and the contractors found it necessary to abandon work for a time. The scarcity of labor speaks well for the prosperity of times—when $2.25 per day is no inducement. A very good grade has been found, and there are very few big cuts or deep fills, and no swamp en route. On either side of the right of way are lined up magnificent specimens of white and Norway pine, spruce, cedar, tamarack, birch and maple. The maple and birch are particularly noticeable, and will prove a source of great wealth. Proceeding northeastward, the timber seems to get finer, and the Blackduck people say the soil thereabouts is very rich and productive.

Blackduck is several months old, claiming a population of 600. There are stores of all kinds, eleven saloons and almost as many hotels. The National hotel, owned by Mrs. Mary Bain, was erected during last winter at a cost of over $3,000. There are twenty-two bed rooms, all nicely carpeted and finely furnished, a parlor, a large office, a fine bar room about 30 x 50, and everything in proportion. The building is two-story and sheathed with steel siding. Mrs. Bain conducts a splendid place. Another favorite place is Mrs. Della Clark's hotel, beautifully located on an elevation, facing the pine forest. Several former Red Lake Falls people are in business there. Carl E. Oberg is cashier of the Blackduck bank; Jesse Freestone owns a livery stable; Ed. Boyle is the ice man; J. R. Pacha and J. A. Bray conduct a saloon and Rev. Astwood is pastor of the Presbyterian flock, with a fine church edifice as a monument to his push. Rev. Astwood owns a fine claim in that vicinity. Blackduck will no doubt have a big boom this fall when the road is completed in there.

The roads from Turtle up, a distance of some fifteen miles, are such that a full day is consumed in making the trip by team, and it is worth one's life to hang on to the seat over the corduroys, stumps, logs and chuckholes. Men, women and children prefer walking, and the trip from Blackduck to Turtle is easily made in five hours.

Navigate Big Fork.

Dan Rose is corresponding with a Minneapolis party, says the Deer River News, with a view to putting in a steamboat line on the waters of the Big Fork river. Should he succeed in launching the project, he will put on a boat to ply between Little Bow Spring lake and Big Falls, and also one below the falls to work between that and some point on the Canadian border to begin with. Should business inter increase enough he would then double the fleet. With traffic on these waters in freight and passengers as it is, and rapidly increasing, such a project would certainly pay, and Dan Rose is just the man for the business. He is familiar with every point on the route, and a steady and upright young hustler. Somebody will certainly take advantage of the opening before long, and those now studying the scheme will be forever sorry if they miss this golden opportunity.

HEARS FROM POTTS.

SECRETARY WOOD, OF THE BOARD OF TRADE, HAS A LETTER.

J. E. Potts has written a letter to A. W. Wood, secretary of the Board of Trade, asking for Red Lake Falls' best offer for a paper and pulp mill. The firm with which he is interested has just lost their plant by fire and are looking toward Red Lake Falls with longing eyes. None of our citizens have forgotten Mr. Potts—who was instrumental in locating the saw mill here, and Secretary Wood will give him full particulars as to our resources so that he may lay the matter before his company. In the meantime another pulp mill proposition is working very satisfactorily and may materialize.

KILLED BY TRAMPS

HOBOES MURDER A CATTLE TENDER ON A TRAIN NEAR LITTLE FALLS.

Victory for Independent Northwestern Elevators—Huntly Merchant Held Up and Relieved of $600—Oldest Woman in Minnesota Dies at Duluth. Fatal Threshing Engine Explosion. General State News.

Little Falls, Minn., Aug. 25.—A most horrible and cold-blooded murder was perpetrated about 2 a. m. on a moving cattle train, bound for the West, about three and one-half miles from this city.

Two brothers, John and Paul McGrath, were held up by the hoboes, and John was shot dead by a bullet in his left breast.

Paul McGrath, as soon as the trouble commenced, escaped to the top of the car, but they followed him up, took what money he had and threw him back into the car, closed the doors and jumped off. The train crew were not aware of the murder until the train reached Lincoln.

ELEVATOR POOL DEFEATED.

Western Grain Shippers Score an Important Point.

Duluth, Aug. 26.—A case of more than unusual importance and interest has just been decided at Buffalo, N. Y., in the matter of rebates on grain shipments. It is important to all Western shippers. Spencer Kellogg of that city owns and operates a large grain elevator. He refused to enter the elevator pool of Buffalo, in which were the elevators of the various railroad systems and others there, and brought suit to compel the roads to cease their discrimination against his house. They had a scheme by which all grain that was handled through the pool houses was given a half-cent rebate, which Kellogg was not allowed. In fact, the roads gave the rebate on grain he handled to the rival elevator owners. He sued to stop the practice and to secure the same rates as the others had and has won. The matter is of the greatest importance to the West as the Buffalo elevator pool has been one of the heaviest drains against the shipper that has ever existed and all Northwestern shippers have suffered at its hands.

HELD UP AND ROBBED.

Merchant Is Relieved of $600 Without Much Trouble.

Winnebago City, Minn., Aug. 22.—Morris Secor was held up at Huntly and relieved of $600 in cash. Mr. Secor runs a general store at Huntly and has been made paying teller for the creamery at that place. As there is no bank at Huntly, the creamery deposit is held by the First National bank of this place.

Thursday Mr. Secor came to Winnebago City and drew $600 with which to cash the farmers' checks for last month's account. About 9 o'clock in the evening he was preparing to close his store and was alone. While arranging matters at his desk he looked up and found himself facing two guns at short range.

The guns were held by one man with a red handkerchief over his face with holes cut for the eyes and mouth. His coat was turned wrong side out as a further disguise. He demanded the money Mr. Secor had by him. Mr. Secor had no other recourse than to hand over the money or take the chances on his life.

One of the Features of the Plan for State Drainage.

Crookston, Minn., Aug. 24.—Civil Engineer George A. Ralph, in charge of the work to be done by the board appointed to expend the state drainage appropriation, has made surveys of the four principal canals to be built, and will submit his report to the board at a meeting in St. Paul early next month.

The four places at which the work will be done are in the counties of Norman, Polk, Roseau and Marshall. One of the most important matters is the opening of the channel of Lost river, in eastern Polk county. This involves the building of a drainage ditch through a swamp into Beltrami county, five miles long, whereby several thousand acres of land will be redeemed and made productive.

OLDEST IN MINNESOTA.

Dorothy Washington, 107 Years of Age, Is Dead.

Duluth, Aug. 21.—Dorothy Washington, aged 107 years 5 months and 2 days, is dead at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Ann Hopkins, in this city. She was the oldest person living in Duluth, and, so far as is known here, she was the oldest in the state. She was a colored woman and was clear of head and active up to a short time before her death.

THRESHING ENGINE EXPLODES.

One Person Killed and Several Others Seriously Injured.

Canby, Minn., Aug. 25.—A steam threshing engine belonging to Sam Watkins exploded while threshing on the farm of C. L. Christenson near Porter, Minn., and instantly killed Mrs. Christenson and severely injured her young daughter, Lars Christianson, John Anderson and one of the assistants at the machine.

DID MUCH DAMAGE.

Minneapolis Experiences a Severe Wind and Hail Storm.

Minneapolis, Aug. 27.—Minneapolis experienced a fierce rain, wind and hail storm about 9 p. m., which did much damage in the city and vicinity. The storm came up suddenly and while the hail lasted but 15 minutes the high wind which accompanied it made great havoc.

In the business section of the city large plate glass windows were blown from their casings and smashed on the sidewalks. The car system of the city was demoralized for three hours, the trolley lines being crossed with those of the General Electric, Western Union and North American companies.

At one of the Great Northern steel elevators the heavy cupola was blown clean from the building, smashing a house nearby, the residents narrowly escaping injury. In many residence sections all the windows in the houses were blown and battered out, trees were blown down and other havoc done. Reports from the surrounding country show that the storm covered a comparatively small area and it is probable that little damage was done to crops.

WILL TAKE APPEAL.

St. Louis Road and a Ruling of the Ramsey District Court.

St. Paul, Aug. 26.—The Minneapolis and St. Louis Railroad company has appealed to the supreme court from the decision of Judge Lewis, Ramsey district court, holding that the company must pay a 3 per cent tax on the gross earnings of the Minneapolis, New Ulm and Southwestern branch, running from Winthrop, Sibley county, to New Ulm.

The branch was completed as an independent line in 1897, and as such was to pay a 1 per cent tax for the first three years 2 per cent until 1907, and then a 3 per cent tax.

The Minneapolis and St Louis company bought the line in February, 1899, and A. T. Koerner, then state treasurer, at once planned taxes at the rate of 3 per cent. The company objected and seeks to enjoin the state treasurer from collecting the tax. It was first defeated in the district court. Then filed an amended complaint, to which Mr. Koerner demurred and Judge Lewis sustained the demurrer. It is from this order by Judge Lewis that the company appeals.

CHEAP FUEL PROMISED.

Texas Crude Oil for Use of Northwestern People.

St. Paul, Aug. 21.—W. M. Crook of Beaumont, Tex., is in St. Paul in the interest of a project which he is confident will revolutionize the manufacturing industries and household economy of the Northwest. He is a director in a company which is preparing to make St Paul the distributing point of the Northwest for fuel oil. The oil, he says, can be brought to St. Paul for 40 cents a barrel, and one barrel of it is equal to two tons of coal.

His company is looking for a five-acre tract as the site for storage tanks, which will have a capacity of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 barrels. The company is also preparing to run a line of barges from Beaumont to St. Paul for the transportation of the oil.

Mr. Crook says tha the oil can be used for all purposes for which coal is at present required. The Santa Fe and the Southern Pacific railway companies are burning the oil in their engines and it is claimed are saving 85 per cent on their fuel bills.

AFTER SALOON MEN.

Series of Mysterious Incendiary Fires at Alexandria, Minn.

Alexandria, Minn., Aug. 21.—Several mysterious series of fires, clearly incendiary and apparently directed against saloonkeepers, have taken place in this city. First the building known as the Corner Saloon, on Main street, an old landmark, erected in the early history of the place, was damaged beyod repair.

A few weeks later the icehouse adjoining the saloon occupied by John Miller, on Sixth avenue, was fired. Within a few days the Aberle building on Main street, occupied as a saloon by Clement Schneiderhan, was set on fire by the use of kerosene and destroyed.

Last night a pile of rubbish in the rear of the Sundblad building on the corner of Main street and Fifth avenue was saturated with oil and lighted, but the blaze was discovered and extinguished before much damage resulted.

WOULD NOT TAKE A DARE.

Young Man Drowned in the St. Louis River at Duluth.

Duluth, Aug. 26.—Louis H. Rogers, a clerk for the Marshall-Wells Hardware company, was drowned in the St. Louis river during the afternoon while attempting to swim to shore from a steamer. He and a companion were discussing their respective merits as swimmers and each dared the other to jump in and swim ashore. Rogers finally jumped and after swimming about 100 yards suddenly threw up his hands and sank. The river is about a quarter of a mile wide at that point.

Minnesota Has the Most Cases.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev. A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, and he said, 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told him to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured." ARE YOU A SHOPLIFTER?

An article published recently in the Benton Harbor News will appeal with force to many grocers who handle fruit in season. It reads as follows:

"Look at those boxes now," said a leading grocer this morning, pointing to a dozen boxes of plums, some half empty and others only minus the top layer. "Yesterday morning they were all full to the top. Where have they gone to? They have been taken by women thieves. They are the best women in town, intended to be honest and probably think they are, but nevertheless they are thieves. The trouble is, they have divorced themselves from the idea that it is as dishonest to steal a pin as a ring. Here comes a lady. She takes one plum and passes on without even thinking that she committed a theft. One plum isn't very much, but suppose one hundred women do likewise. It's a bad habit and an expensive one for the fruit dealers."

A few days after the News printed an interview with the grocer referred to in the above article in which he said that the nuisance had been much abated since the matter had been brought to the attention of his customers by the newspapers. Twenty-three of his lady customers had mentioned the matter to him and acknowledged that they had been guilty of the offense without giving the matter a thought.

At the present price of fruit, this practice is certainly an expensive one for the grocer, and one which he would be glad to see discontinued without having to speak of the matter himself.

THE YOUNG MAN'S CHANCES.

J. Sterling Morton's Conservative for Aug. 15 has an interesting symposium in reply to the question, "What are the young man's chances?" The conclusion of the contributors, in which the editor joins, is that "a young man's opportunities in the business world were never more numerous, attractive or conspicuous."

The Conservative, however, warns young men against the false notion that success can be attained without hard work, and especially does it warn them against speculation, in which where few succeed thousands fail. The successes are blazoned to the world, failures are seldom heard of; they are the wrecks that strew the wayside to which small heed is paid in the fierce competition of life.

It is doubtless true that the combinations in the industrial world have brought many changes and wrought hardships in many cases, but it is also a fact that nearly all the captains of industry are what are called self-made men—men who have won by their own efforts and merits.

So The Conservative predicts that "the successful man of the future will be he who has brains to begin with, and who works honestly, industriously and intelligently.

If Mr. Morton had been so minded he might have illustrated how the possession of these qualities win success for young men by citing the example of his own sons, who have won noteworthy positions in different fields by their capacity to "grasp the skirts of circumstances."

Verily the young man's chances were never better than they are to-day.

Yesterday was celebrated the 78th anniversary of the landing of Beltrami at Lake Julia, where Beuna Vista, Beltrami Co., is now located. The Rev. J. B. Astwood, formerly of Red Lake Falls, delivered an historical address on Beltrami's Blackduck explorations.

ARMOUR'S SIX RULES OF SUCCESS.

Good men are not cheap.

Capital can do nothing without brains to direct it.

No general can fight his battles alone. He must depend upon his lieutenants, and his success depends upon his ability to select the right man for the right place.

There is no such thing as luck.

Most men talk too much. Much of my success has been due to keeping my mouth shut.

The young man who wants to marry should pick out a good mother, and marry one of her daughters—any one will do.

Henry Watterson wants William C. Whitney to run for president in 1904. Mr. Whitney is rich, and in view of the easy manner in which he comes and goes, it is but fair to presume that he is happy. But Mr. Watterson always has seemed to enjoy himself best when getting people into trouble.

Minnesota's annual butter and cheese products are worth $16,000,000, or about one-third the value of the wheat crop. Diversification of industry is making Minnesota agriculturists richer than ever before. There are 635 creameries and 80 cheese factories in successful operation, and Minnesota butter takes prizes everywhere.

While loading a shot gun Sunday afternoon Gilbert O. Sandadden, a young man living ten miles north of Fertile, met with an accident which will probably cost him an arm and possibly his life. His left wrist was resting on the muzzle of the gun when the weapon was accidentally discharged, the load entering his wrist and under jaw. He was brought to Fertile for treatment.

The forthcoming reports of the labor commissioner and the commissioner of statistics will show a condition of affairs in the labor and agricultural world of Minnesota that will be actually startling to those who have not given the matter special study. Everybody knows in a general way that all branches of employment and business are in a flourishing condition and that this is the workingman's state and the workingman's year, but few realize the vastness of the improvement in the past four years. The actual figures are not yet obtainable but enough has been disclosed by the investigations made to warrant the conclusion that the number of men in steady employment is almost double what it was at the beginning of 1897, and that the wages in force are at least 50 per cent. higher. Such conditions cannot fail to establish a prosperity that is as general and lasting as the state itself.

Newspapers throughout the state are now advising their readers to patronize home merchants and not regard the alluring talk of agents and catchy ads of wholesale houses, and thousands of dollars are spent with home merchants as a result, that would otherwise go to outside dealers. Still many merchants refuse to spend a dollar in advertising in the local papers, and some even send away for job printing. It requires a peculiar Christian grace to run a newspaper under some circumstances.

Of the sale of state lands held at Bemidji last Tuesday, by State Auditor Dunn, the Pioneer has this to say: "About 6,000 acres were sold at an average price of over $5 per acre. First payments on the same amounted to $5,000. Mr. Dunn says he consideres this the most successful sale he has held in the new timber country. Considering the price per acre for purely agricultural lands and that the bidders were mostly homesteaders, the sale was a very creditable showing for the new county of Beltrami."

It is a requirement of the state laws, that traction threshing engines must not, while on a street or highway and within five hundred feet of any team passing thereon, blow the whistle. Also the engine must be stopped at least one hundred feet before meeting any horse or team of horses that are on the street, road or public way, and it must not be started until such horse or team of horses has passed the engine to a safe distance. The law is very drastic, for it not only provides severe penalties for violation of its provisions but the owner of a traction engine is liable for all damages caused by disregard.

MY CAPTIVE.

alarm.

"Take me away from here, Mr. Marcel! Take me away at once! I would rather be with you than these men, these savages, these brutes! Nor is your life safe here!"

"They wear the British uniform. They must be loyal British soldiers," I could not keep from saying.

"I do not know what they are," she replied, with alarmed insistence, "but let's go. Pray take me at once."

She pulled at my shoulders as if she would have me rise and go on the instant.

"Untie my wrists," I said.

She tugged at the cords, but could do nothing. They were too tight.

"Take a knife from that drunken fool's belt," I said, indicating one of the men. "Don't be afraid. He won't wake."

She took the knife from the man's belt and cut my bonds. I rubbed my wrists together for a few minutes to take out the stiffness and to restore the circulation. Again she urged me to start without delay.

"Wait a minute," I said. "We must provide ourselves."

They had taken my arms from me when they bound me, and I recovered them, adding to my supply Crowder's pistol and some ammunition. Then I turned to the horses.

Old Put's great dark eyes flamed with approval and gladness. He had stood at his halter's length, watching the orgy and my rescue with attention and understanding.

"We'll bid farewell to these beasts now, old comrade," I said in a whisper, patting his nose.

He was too cautious to whinny a reply. The brown hack was near him, but I saw another among those belonging to the guerrillas which I fancied much more than he. I hastily changed Miss Howard's saddle to his back, assisted her to mount and sprang upon Old Put.

I turned the heads of our horses toward the northwest, but as the woods before us were dense and interlaced with wiry bushes and creeping vines we dared not attempt more than a walk. The horses stamped and neighed as we left them. The girl's mount stepped on a large, dry branch, which broke with a crack like a pistol shot. Nor did ill luck stop at that. The abandoned horses, frightened by the report, neighed and stamped again, creating a great uproar.

The sentinel, who was the least drunk of the party, sprang to his feet. He was yet half dazed with sleep and liquor, but he saw the dim figures of a man and a woman riding away from the little encampment, and he knew that, according to the plans of Captain Crowder, it was not what should be. He fired a hasty pistol shot in our direction, the bullet clipping the dry twigs above our heads, and then shouted to his comrades to awake, giving emphasis to his cries with many sturdy kicks.

"Look out for your head!" I shouted to Miss Howard. "An untoward bough might prove fatal. And be sure you stay with me."

"I'll not leave you."

"Now, Old Put," I said, "lead us out of this."

He curved his long neck in the darkness and looked ahead with sharp brown eyes. I let the reins fall loose, and he wound about among the trees with a judgment that was never at fault. The other horse kept close at his side. Behind us we could hear the cries of the awakened men as they leaped upon their horses and rode after us, shouting to us to stop. Two or three more pistol shots were fired, but the air received them.

If the men could see at all, it was but dimly, though they could follow us by the hoof beats of our horses and the tearing of the vines and slapping of the bushes as we passed. They made such a prodigious cursing and swearing that we were never in any doubt as to where they were. I had a mind for a moment to send toward them a pistol ball which would stop their fuss, but I concluded that the more noise they made the better it would be for us, as it gave us exact warning of their approach. They did not seem to be gaining upon us, which was a satisfaction for the present. Out on the plain they would see us more distinctly, but I believed that our horses could leave them there.

I saw a beam of light shining through the latticework of the boughs and then another and another and knew that we would soon be in the open. The girl's horse stumbled, and she uttered a little cry of dismay, but in a moment the horse was steady on his feet again, and we went on. The beams grew more numerous and fused into a broad shield of moonlight. Two minutes more and we would be out of the wood and into the cleared ground, with the fields racing behind us.

But the light had its evil for us. Against its broad silver disk we were silhouetted like the man in the moon, and the popping of pistols told us that we had become good targets. One bullet passed so close to my head that I thought it must have cut a lock of hair in its passage, and I took it as a warning to hurry.

"Haste, Miss Howard!" I said. "We want to be beyond pistol shot in the cleared ground, for the light will help them there."

She was riding well, and her expression was firm and courageous. We shook the reins against the necks of our horses, and taking the chances of bush and vine sped into the open as a volley of pistol shots whistled after us.

I uttered a shout half of pleasure, half of defiance, to our pursuers and bade Old Put show them what it was for a real horse to run his best. I had confidence, too, in the horse that the girl rode, for he was long limbed. He looked like a strong animal, and he certainly had a clean, fast gait that kept him alongside of Old Put.

I regarded our escape as assured, and the girl seemed to take a like view of the case. Relief showed in her eyes.

"Miss Howard," I said cheerfully and egotistically, "I congratulate you on the improvement in your company."

"At any rate, you are still a rebel, with a rope around your neck."

"I seem to have been preferred to the British behind us, who do not have ropes around their necks, but deserve them. Remember that I ride with you at your own invitation."

"UNTIE MY WRISTS," I SAID.

"Then you consider me still your prisoner?"

"Oh, I am yours; but, whether one or the other, I am to be guide."

The men behind us were silent, and we were sure of gaining upon them. I could see their figures rising out of the plain in the misty gray light, gigantic and distorted in shape, and the thud, thud of their horses' hoofs, as regular as the ticking of a clock, came to our ears.

"Which way do we go?" asked the girl.

"To Morgan, of course."

"Then I shall soon be with my father and friends again."

"Why do you think so?"

"Because Tarleton will certainly take Morgan, and of course I shall be retaken."

She looked at me with much of the old sparkle and defiance and the absolute faith in British valor that British defeats seemed unable to shake. I was annoyed, and my patriotic pride was hurt.

"You seem to take it for granted that Tarleton will win if he should overtake Morgan."

"I do."

"Yet you have heard the news from King's Mountain?"

"A chance, an accident."

"The same chance, the same accident may happen again."

"Never."

I could not say her nay, for were we not retreating steadily before the advance of Tarleton, a retreat that seemed to all to be the part of wisdom, for again let it be said that we were fewer in numbers, far inferior in equipment, and more than half of our little army were raw troops, farmers! The exhilaration of the flight and escape disappeared for the time, and a heavy depression took its place.

CHAPTER VI.

IN A STATE OF SIEGE.

Old Put stretched his neck, and the regular, steady beat of his flying hoofs was music to a man who loves a good horse. But the new horse, too, lengthened his stride and kept by my side. I judged that he was a good comrade for Old Put. The plain, grassy and undulating, rolled away before us, and I could not see its end.

Our pursuers hung on, and I distrusted their silence. It betokened resolution, a determination to follow us mile after mile, to hang to the chase like hounds after a deer. I judged that among Crowder's motives chagrin at having made such a fool of himself and a desire to repair the error were the strongest. The men did not spread out fan shape, but followed us in a close group. I was still sure that we were gaining, though very slowly, and they seemed to think so, too, for presently they fired two or three shots, as if they hoped to frighten us with spent balls. The girl's horse swayed a bit to one side, and I thought he had stumbled again, but she said he was merely startled by the pistol shots, and, pulling him back into the true course, we galloped on.

We crossed a swell of the earth, and far out on the plain I saw the dim outlines of a small house, or rather log cabin, rising from the earth. The girl's horse threw up his head and uttered a neigh, or rather a cry or a great sigh, for it was almost like that of a human being, and staggered from side to side, his pace sinking quickly from a sure gallop to a shaky trot. The horse's great eyes were distended with pain and fear, and blood and foam were on his lips. A dark red clot of blood appeared upon his side, and I knew then that one of the bullets which I thought would fall short had struck him and the wound was mortal.

Without my hand pulling upon his rein Old Put stopped and looked at the other horse with eyes of pity and sorrow, for he knew what was going to happen—he knew he was going to lose one who had been proving himself a worthy running mate and comrade.

I leaped from Old Put's back and snatched the girl from the saddle just as her horse reeled and fell and gave up his honest life with one great groan.

I half lifted, half pushed, the girl upon Old Put's back, where she sat securely despite the man's saddle. Once she protested, but I roughly bade her be silent and obey me and we would escape yet. Then she said no more.

"See the house yonder?" I said. "We will reach that and beat them off. Maybe we will find allies there. This should be a patriot region."

I rested one arm on Old Put's shoulder. The girl was on the horse's back, and I, partly supported by him, ran by his side. It is a trick that the borderers will tell you is common and useful enough. Old Put gave me great assistance, for he understood, and as we flew along my feet at times seemed not to touch the ground.

Our pursuers reached the crest of the swell and raised a shout of triumph as they saw the dead horse in the path and the single horse running on, carrying one of the fugitives and half carrying the other.

I took one quick look backward and calculated that we would reach the hut in time. Our pursuers evidently did not think so, for they fired no more shots. The girl was silent, her hands folded upon the pommel of my saddle and her face all white again. She left the direction of everything to me.

The cabin continued to rise from the plain, the corners, the eaves and the roof appearing until it stood before us distinct and near at hand.

"Now, Put, old comrade, greatest of horses," I cried, "we are nearing the goal! Show them how much strength and speed you have kept in reserve for this last effort! Show them what you can do when you try your best!"

He replied by deed, and I fairly swung through the air as we raced straight to the cabin. I expected some tousled head to appear, roused by the thunder of so many hoofs, but none came. The cabin remained silent and lone. There was a small garden, but no fence around either it or the house.

Old Put dashed straight for the door, as if he knew what was wanted of him, which, in fact, he did, and stopped five feet in front of it so abruptly that the girl would have shot over his head had I not held her.

She sprang to the ground. I slipped the bridle off Old Put's head, gave him a slap and cried:

"Go!"

He galloped around the house and disappeared, his hoof beats dying away in the darkness. Then I shoved the door open and rushed in, dragging the girl after me. I slammed back the door and looked for the bar that is commonly used as a fastening in such frontier houses. There it was, and I shoved it into its place. Nothing but a battering ram could break in that door now!

"Safe for the time!" I cried. "I defy them to take us in this fort!"

Then I looked around me. The girl, half fainting, had staggered against the wall and was leaning there. It was a house of but a single room. On a wide brick hearth a fire was still burning, or rather smoldering, yet it threw out enough light to disclose the contents of the room. No human being was there. Everything of value except the heavy furniture, which was of the rudest description and worth not much more than raw lumber, had been removed, and the whole appearance of the place indicated that its occupants had taken a hasty departure. It was easy enough to guess the cause. Some poor family, frightened by the converging of the armies upon this region, and with good reason, too, for no other state was harried in this war as was ours of South Carolina, had gathered up their portable goods and fled to safer quarters and perhaps not an hour before our arrival, as the fire still burning proved.

COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

"They might have made things a little more comfortable for us," I said cheerfully, for my spirits had gone up with a leap, "but it's good as it is, and we haven't any right to complain. Mr. South Carolina farmer, whoever you are and wherever you are, we thank you."

The girl smiled faintly and walked mechanically to the fire, where she sat down on a rude stool and spread out her fingers before the coals as if she were in her home.

"Take a little of this," I said, for I saw that she was half dazed. There was yet a little whisky left in my flask, and I handed it to her. She obeyed me like a child and drank it.

Then I turned my attention to the single window, which was closed with a heavy but ill fitting shutter, some wandering moonbeams finding a way through the cracks. Peeping out, I could see the guerrillas dismounted beyond pistol shot and holding a conference.

"They are talking, but let 'em talk, my dear," I said to the girl. "They can't get us in this cabin What a neat, stout little place it is!"

I really began to have a friendly feeling toward her. We had been through so many dangers together, and besides she was my prisoner. It is much easier for the conqueror to be generous to the conquered than for the conquered to be generous to the conqueror.

She did not reply either to my words or my manner. Her cheeks, which had been so white before, were faintly flushed with pink, but I could not tell whether it was the fire or not. She seemed to me to be in a state of collapse, natural to a girl, even the strongest and bravest, after so much.

"Now set the table for us," I said. "We must eat a little after our long, hard ride, for we will need our strength. See if you can't find a candle in that cupboard. And, here, take my bundle and get out the food."

I handed her the wallet of bread and meat which I had snatched from Old Put's back almost with the same motion with which I had swept off his bridle. She took it, drew the rough pine table to the center of the room and spread the food upon it. Then, sure enough, she found in the cupboard a piece of old tallow candle, which she lighted and stuck in the middle of the table. These simple household duties seemed to revive her. Her eyes brightened, her color came back, and her first thought was half to defend, half to apologize, for her previous collapse.

"I was tired merely," she said. "I did not lose courage. Don't think that. I'm an English girl."

"I never said you lost courage," I replied. "I think that you have borne yourself bravely, almost as well as an American girl would have done in the same situation."

"Show me the one who would have done better," she said, with a snap of the eye.

But that was manifestly impossible at the time, and I made no such attempt.

"The table is ready, and we wait only for the army to take a seat and enjoy itself," she said in a light tone.

"Come and take a look at our enemies first," I said, noticing how her strength and courage had come back and how well they became her.

She put her eyes to one of the cracks and looked out. Crowder and his men, unconsciously imitating us, had begun to make themselves comfortable, first by building a great bonfire and then by sitting around it and keeping themselves warm. They had tethered their horses near, and from their position they could watch the house very well and detect us if we came forth.

"Why do they follow us so persistently?" the girl asked.

"For a variety of reasons," I replied. "I might mention for one that they are anxious to take me. You know you told them that I was the bearer of very important news which I would tell under proper pressure to Tarleton."

"But that was not true."

"They do not know that it was not."

"I wish they were real British soldiers," she said. "I do not believe that any of them ever saw England. I believe they are American Tories, maybe American rebels in British uniforms."

I did not care to argue with her, such is the strength of prejudice founded on teaching and training, especially British prejudice and most especially the prejudice of British women.

"Why did you take off his bridle?" she asked as she turned away from the window.

I had hung up Old Put's bridle on a nail in the wall.

"In order that I may have it when I want to put it on him again, which won't be long, I hope," I replied.

"Why, the horse is gone!" she said.

I laughed, laughed in her face, which turned red, and then, seeing that it was red, deliberately laughed again. Here was a woman who prided herself on her intelligence and quickness of mind, and with good cause, too, so I had begun to believe, and yet after passing a day and part of a night in Old Put's presence she knew so little about him!

"Why do you laugh?" she asked redly and angrily.

"I laugh at your ignorance," I said, "the fact that you know so little of our comrade, in many respects the shrewdest and ablest of us three, as he is certainly the swiftest and the strongest. That horse has not left us. I merely took his bridle off in order that he might not be troubled with it, that he might eat better, for no doubt he will find somewhere around here, even in winter, a bit of grazing on some sheltered and sunny southern slope. He will take care of himself and come back to us when we need him."

"But suppose the guerrillas take him?"

"I wish I was as sure that they would not take us," I said.

Then I led the way to the table. I drew up the stool for the lady and an old pine box that I found in a corner for myself. A little water was left in the canteen. She drank part of it and said:

"Here's to the health of King George!"

"Yes," I said as I drank the remainder of the water, "this is to the health of King George—George Washington! I'm glad to see that your conversion has begun."

She frowned at me, but we had an amicable dinner over the scraps nevertheless. I stopped at intervals to watch the progress of the partisans outside. They had not yet made any movement against us, and all sat or lay around the fire. I counted them—six—and I knew that all were there, as choice a lot of scoundrels as one could find on the soil of the 13 colonies.

I turned my eyes away from the crevice to look at the girl. The rest and the bits of food had made a wonderful improvement. She was a true English rose, I could see that—a rose of Devon or Warwick or Kent, or whatever is fairest among their roses, a girl with yellow hair that shone like fresh gold in the sun, tinted with red in the firelight, and a brow of white and cheeks of the warm pink that is the heart of the pink rose. Oh, well, as I said twice before, everybody knows that the most beautiful women are the most dangerous, and I wondered if these Saxon maidens of old England were ever an exception. For a moment I felt a feeling of warmth and kinship to old England, but then this England, which is so kind to herself and so appreciative of her own merits, has never been anything but an enemy to us.

"What are you thinking of, Mr. Marcel?" she said suddenly as she looked up. "Why are you so serious?"

"I am astonished that you should address me as Mr. Marcel and not as a rebel, with a rope around his neck."

She patted the floor meditatively with her foot and looked away from me and at the fire.

"It was a mistake due to forgetfulness," she said, with an air of resentment. "I will not do it again."

"I would not forget epithets when you speak of us," I said. "You will get out of practice, and then you will be unlike the remainder of your countrymen and countrywomen."

"Do you want another quarrel?" she asked pointedly. "I should think that we had enough to do to carry on our quarrel with those men outside."

She went to the window and took a long look.

"They are still by the fire," she said, "and I see your horse too. He is dining like the rest of us."

"Where?" I cried, for I was somewhat surprised at the early reappearance of Old Put.

"There's another crack here. Use it," she said. "Don't you see him grazing over there to the left in that field, surrounded by a tumble down fence, or rather the rails of what used to be a fence?"

In truth, it was Old Put, about 50 yards to the left of the cavalrymen and grazing with supreme horse content, as if no enemy were within 50 miles of him. It was a southern slope on which he stood, and I suppose some blades of grass had retained their freshness and tenderness despite the wintry winds. It was these that Old Put sought, with the assiduous attention to detail and keen eye for grist characteristic of him.

There was a fine, full moon, shedding silver gray light over the earth. Old Put was clothed in its radiance, and we could see him as distinctly as if he stood at the window—the long, tapering head; the velvety nose, which slid here and there over the grass in search of the tender stems; the sinewy neck and the long, powerful body, marked often, it is true, by wear and war, but in the prime and zenith of its strength. My saddle was still upon his back, but that was a trifle to which he had long since grown accustomed in his life with a cavalryman.

How rash of him, I thought, to come so near the British! The old doubt which I had of Old Put when he allowed himself to be deceived by the girl came back to me. Perhaps he was really growing old, falling into his dotage. Surely nothing else could account for his taking such a risk! I would have shouted to him to go away had I thought he could hear me, but I knew my voice could not reach him, and in suspense and anxiety I merely watched that old horse as he continued to graze almost within the light of his enemy's campfire.

CHAPTER VII.

THE TEMPER OF OLD PUT.

My fears found ample justification, for the men soon turned their attention to the horse, and two rose and approached him. I looked upon him as one impounded, and he alone was to blame, for he should have known better. One of the men made a wide circuit and came up carefully behind, while the other approached with equal caution from the front, whistling in a soft and coaxing way and holding out his hand. Evidently the man appreciated the value of a good horse, and no doubt they had stolen enough from patriot farmers to have experience. Old Put never raised his head to look at them, but continued his hunt for blades of grass. He certainly heard their approaching footsteps, and I was convinced now that his dotage was really at hand.

"I thought you said he was the most intelligent of us three," said the girl ironically, "and here he is, gone to sleep and letting himself be taken, to be used perhaps as a common cart horse."

Her words were an insult to us both, Old Put and me, but I knew no timely reply, and I endured them in silence.

The man in front, emboldened by Old Put's gentleness, approached more rapidly and was soon within 15 feet of the horse. Old Put raised his head, and looking at the man a moment lowered it and went on nipping the grass.

The man holding out his hand stepped forward and seized Old Put by the neck. The horse, with a neigh that was human in its anger, turned and bit deep into his shoulder. A scream, wilder, more fearful than any I have ever heard before or since, rose from the man's throat as the horse reared high in the air and smote him to the earth with his fore feet. The girl turned her eyes away in horror as the man was crushed to pulp beneath the fierce beat of the steel shod hoofs, time for but one cry being given to him, but I kept mine at the crevice, though I will confess that the blood was rather a chilly torrent in my veins.

The other man, the one behind, faced about and fled when he saw the death of his comrade, and the one look that I had of him showed fright to the marrow. The horse, raising his head, trotted away over the hill. The moonlight fell upon him there in distorted rays and enlarged him into a gigantic figure. In the gray light he looked like some phantom horse, a wild creature that brought death.

The band, recovering from the momentary paralysis caused by the sudden acquaintance of their comrade with death, snatched out their pistols and fired at the horse as they would have fired at a man in his place, but their aim was wild, for the horse gave no sign of a bullet, trotting steadily on, his figure growing larger and more threatening in the exaggerating rays of the moonlight, until he disappeared beyond the swell of the earth. The thing that had been living lay in the dead grass, and I was glad that it was hidden almost by some rocks and the roll of the earth.

"He is gone, Julia," I said, "and I don't think those men will try to take my horse again."

I laughed a little, with a rather forced gayety, for the influence of the sudden tragedy was still upon me. Yet I was glad that Old Put had redeemed himself so conclusively from the charge of incaution and dotage, which I would never again bring against him, even should they come to be true in the course of the years.

The girl came back to the crevice, and we watched the British for some minutes. After the hasty discharge of the pistols they returned to the fire, making no movement either to pursue Old Put or to remove the body of their dead comrade. They would have liked well enough to obtain a good horse, but they were not going to bother about such a trifle as a dead man.

"Do you think they will attack us?" asked the girl.

"Well, no; not yet, at least," I replied. "The advantages of the defense are too great, and these men are mere raiders and robbers. They are not going into a dangerous venture unless the chances are on their side. Perhaps they think we will become frightened and surrender tomorrow."

"You surely will not do that?"

"I had no such intention, worthless rebel as I am, but if you say surrender I will go out and notify them this minute."

"You know I meant nothing of the kind."

She spoke rather sharply, and leaving the window went back to the table, which she began to clear away. She gathered up the scraps and put them back neatly. Then she brushed the crumbs off in her hand, for lack of anything else, and threw them in the fire, and having done that pushed the table to one side against the wall. I made no offer to help her, as she did everything with such skill and dispatch, and I was content to watch her. Nor did she say anything to me, but, her work done, took her stool again and sat down at the corner of the hearthstone, leaning her head against the wall of the chimney and gazing into the dying fire.

The last log was smoldering on the hearth and threw but a feeble light. I blew out the candle, thinking we might need it in case our enemies made any hostile movement, and the darkness gathered at once in half the room, only a dim light showing as a fringe to the fire.

"I think you'd better go to sleep," I said to the girl. "It is always well to save one's strength, and now is a chance for rest."

"And you?"

"I don't need any sleep. I'll stay at the window and watch."

"But you need rest as well as I."

"Why do you bother yourself about a villainous rebel who is going to be hanged anyway by his justly angry king?"

"I wish you would stop talking that way."

Her tone was rather plaintive. Undoubtedly she was tired and worn by anxieties, and I obeyed her request. I made her wrap her cloak around her, and, though she declared stoutly that she would not go to sleep, merely wishing to lean her head against the wall and rest, her eyelids drooped and fell, and in two minutes she was asleep.

The fire sank lower, eating its way along the log until only a few inches of wood were left. The girl slept soundly. The curve of the chimney into the wall formed a kind of nook, and her head and shoulders rested easily there like a picture framed against the rough logs, which were unplastered and not even smoothly hewn. I trusted that she would sleep the night through, and as the fire sank lower and lower and the darkness crept up to the hearthstone, almost hiding her figure, the stillness of midnight came, and I could hear her regular breathing in the dead silence.

I went back to the window. The fire of the British faced it, and I could see that three of the men had lain down and gone to sleep. The other two were sitting up, weapons at hand, and I inferred that they had been detailed as sentinels, though their lazy attitudes showed well enough that it was a job they did not like. For all I could tell at the distance, these men, too, might be asleep sitting.

I watched them for a half hour or more and grew very tired of the business. The brightness of the moonlight had culminated, and the earth lost its silver tint, shading into a dark, dull gray. The figures of our besiegers grew shadowy and shapeless. It was a time for sleep, and I felt it in all my bones. A trooper doesn't ask much. If I could have taken my blanket and put myself down on a reasonably smooth piece of turf under the shade of a tree, with the certainty that no enemy would waken me, it would have been sufficient for me. I would have slept the sleep of the just or the tired unjust, which is often as good.

I drew the old pine box up to the window and sat on it, resolved to listen, now that I was tired of looking. I wondered what had become of Old Put, the man slayer, and tried to discover why I had been such a fool as to distrust him even for a moment.

Thus musing, I discovered that the fire had gone out; that I could see nothing—in fact, that the room was pitchy dark. I opened my eyes, remembering that all things must be dark to a man with his eyes shut, and saw again the flickering fire and the figure of the girl half reclining in the chimney corner.

This would never do. I was the whole army—horse, foot, artillery and baggage wagons, commander in chief, colonel, captains and privates—and we could never go to sleep all at once. I undertook to walk briskly around the room in order to stir my sluggish blood into watchfulness, but that would wake the girl, and I did not want to do such a cruel thing. I stopped in front of her and looked at her face attentively. Asleep she did not look at all the spitfire she was awake. Mingled with her beauty now was a certain wanness, a something that was pathetic, a look that appealed to a man for protection and strength. After all, she was but a girl, and why should I care for the bitter things she said when probably half the time she said them she was sorry?

I went back to the window and looked out once more. The besieging army was taking its comfort. The part which had stretched itself on the ground remained stretched, and the part which watched sagged more than ever toward the horizontal. It was a lazy army, that was evident, and I resolved that I would set it an example of superiority.

THE CHICKEN SEASON.

With game birds plentiful in this and neighboring states and the season opening legally Sunday, the gun stores and sporting resorts were lively places. Game bags, shooting coats, hammerless guns and unlimited boxes of cartridges were sold. And despite the fact that the opening fell on Sunday, it is likely that few were held back from the enticements of stubble fields and prairie chickens on that account. Indeed, the early harvest and the consequent bare fields have already offered too strong inducements, and the "sooner" made his appearance long ago, to the detriment of the young birds. Although considerable quantities of the birds have gone into the pot-hunter's bag, yet there are great quantities of them to start with, and there are plenty left.

In Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the two Dakotas it was lawful Sunday to hunt prairie chickens. While the birds are reported more plentiful this season in all these states than for some years past, it should not be presumed that, except in two or three of the state named, and in certain sections of those states are the birds plentiful enough to be called abundant. They are more numerous than for several seasons, yet where twenty years ago they were plentiful to-day they are only fairly so.

In Illinois there are only a comparatively few counties in which the birds can be found at all, and where they are to be found they are by no means abundant. In Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the Dakotas the birds are still quite plentiful, but not in every county, as they were in years past.

As the birds become scarcer they seem to grow wiser and seek localities for nesting where they are not so easily found by the hunters, and when they are found they fly farther and to more secluded places. At least to the old hunter it seems that way, for when the birds were numerous a covey was not followed far, because it was not a difficult matter to find another, and the hunter paid little attention to a covey that sought a far-off retreat. Then, in the early days, in the prairie states, there was considerable uncultivated, open land, where the birds found good cover and felt secure, while today there is very little land in any of the northwestern states that is not used for agricultural purposes, and therefore the large wheat fields or the low lands bordering a body of water are about the only places where the birds can go and feel that they are secure, and to these, as a rule, they invariably fly after being disturbed a few times, thus making the hunting more laborious than formerly, and the getting of a bag more difficult.

THE CORN CROP.

The condition of the corn crop of the United States, August 1, as reported by the Department of Agriculture, was 54 per cent of an average crop. The month of August, however, was favorable to the crop in many localities, but the improvement was probably not enough to make any substantial difference in the yield. The crop will be very light, which means a higher price, of course, for marketable grain. Those who have a good crop this year are in luck, and it looks as if it would pay them well this year to market corn by the bushel, instead of by the pound, in pork and beef, which is usually the best method. But the future price of hogs and cattle must determine this matter, and in the meantime corn must be handled with a view to getting the mature grain in the best condition possible, and in feeding it to avoid waste, and to animals that are kept in a condition to utilize to the best advantage what is fed them.—Farm Stock & Home.

A NEW WAY TO GET A PUBLIC OFFICE.

A case that promised to give serious trouble to the Postoffice Department has just been settled in a way that ought to received the enthusiastic approval of the public. At Monticeilo, Wayne County, Ky., Mrs. Mary Tiggle has for several years presided at the stamp window and handed out letters. Mrs. Tiggle seems, however, to have received her appointment from a Democratic administration, wherefore J. L. Kennedy, a stanch Republican, conceived the idea that she ought to be deposed in order that he might have the office.

The matter was laid before Congressman Boreing, who didn't like it a bit. He recognized Mr. Kennedy's claim, but Mrs. Tiggle was a widow, and the authorities at Washington have been inclined to assume a liberal attitude toward widowed postmistress. The lady was gently urged to resign, but she refused, and the Congressman procrastinated. Whenever Kennedy became impatient he was put off with one excuse or another, and thus matters drifted for months and months.

A few days ago Mr. Boreing received a final communication from Kennedy, who said Mrs. Tiggle was ready to quit, and the latter being questioned on the subject admitted that public office had ceased to have charms for her. She had, in fact consented to become Mrs. Kennedy, and she was willing that her husband should succeed her as postmaster at Monticello.

Mr. Kennedy has, therefore, received the appointment, and it is hoped that his course may serve as an example to all single men who shall hereafter attempt to supersede widows in public office. How finely this southern gallantry contrasts with the case of the man who in the rush for land at Lawton crowded ahead of the Kansas telephone girl.

A cheer for the postmaster who married the widow to get her office.

A WEEKLY NEWSPAPER
—BY—
PHIL. A. SAYLER.

Issued weekly, Thursday evening, and entered as second-class matter in the post-office at Red Lake Falls.

Subscription, $1.00 per Year

THE CHICKEN SEASON.

[illegible] game birds plentiful in this [illegible] neighboring states and the season [illegible] legally Sunday, the gun [illegible] and sporting resorts were [illegible] places. Game bags, shooting [illegible] hammerless guns and [illegible] boxes of cartridges were sold, [illegible] despite the fact that the opening [illegible] on Sunday. It is likely that [illegible] bags from the entice[illegible] stubble fields and prairie [illegible] on that account. Indeed, [illegible] harvest and the consequent [illegible] have already offered too [illegible] inducements, and the [illegible] appearance long ago. [illegible] of the young birds, [illegible] considerable quantities of [illegible] have gone into the pot [illegible] yet there are great [illegible] of them to start with, and [illegible] plenty left.

[illegible] Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the two Dakotas it was [illegible] Sunday to hunt prairie chickens. While the birds are reported [illegible] plentiful this season in all [illegible] states than for some years [illegible] should not be presumed [illegible] except in two or three of the [illegible] named, and in certain sections [illegible] these states are the birds plentiful enough to be called abundant. They are more numerous than for [illegible] seasons, yet where twenty years ago they were plentiful to-day they are only fairly so.

In Illinois there are only a comparatively few counties in which the birds can be found at all, and where they are to be found they are by no means abundant. In Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the Dakotas the birds are still quite plentiful, but not in every county, as they were in years past.

As the birds become scarcer they seem to grow wiser and seek localities for nesting where they are not so easily found by the hunters, and when they are found they fly farther and to more secluded places. At least to the old hunter it seems that [illegible] for when the birds were numerous a covey was not followed far because it was not a difficult matter to find another, and the hunter paid little attention to a covey that sought a far-off retreat. Then, in the early days, in the [illegible] states, there was considerable uncultivated, open land, where the birds found good cover and felt secure, while today there is very little land in any of the northwestern states that is not used for agricultural purposes, and therefore the large wheat fields or the low lands bordering a body of water are about the only places where the birds can go and feel that they are secure, and to these, as a rule, they invariably fly after 'being' disturbed a few times, thus making the hunting more laborious than formerly, and the getting of a bag more difficult.

THE CORN CROP.

The condition of the corn crop of the United States August 1, as reported by the Department of Agriculture, was 54 per cent of an average crop. The month of August, however, was favorable to the crop in many localities, but the improvement was probably not enough to make any substantial difference in the yield. The crop will be very light, which means a higher price, of course, for marketable grain. Those who have a good crop this year are in luck, and it looks as if it would pay them well this year to market corn by the bushel, instead of by the pound, in pork and beef, which is usually the best method. But the future price of hogs and cattle must determine this matter, and in the meantime corn must be handled with a view to getting the mature grain in the best condition possible and in feeding it to avoid waste, and to animals that are kept in a condition to utilize to the best advantage what is fed them.—Farm Stock & Home.

A NEW WAY TO GET A PUBLIC OFFICE.

A case that promised to give serious trouble to the Postoffice Department has just been settled in a way that ought to received the enthusiastic approval of the public. At Monticello, Wayne County, Ky., Mrs. Mary Tiggle has for several years presided at the stamp window and handed out letters. Mrs. Tiggle seems, however, to have received her appointment from a Democratic administration, wherefore J. L. Kennedy, a stanch Republican, conceived the idea that she ought to be deposed in order that he might have the office.

The matter was laid before Congressman Boreing, who didn't like it a bit. He recognized Mr. Kennedy's claim, but Mrs. Tiggle was a widow, and the authorities at Washington have been inclined to assume a liberal attitude toward widowed postmistress. The lady was gently urged to resign, but she refused, and the Congressman procrastinated. Whenever Kennedy became impatient he was put off with one excuse or another, and thus matters drifted for months and months.

A few days ago Mr. Boreing received a final communication from Kennedy, who said Mrs. Tiggle was ready to quit, and the latter being questioned on the subject admitted that public office had ceased to have charms for her. She had, in fact consented to become Mrs. Kennedy, and she was willing that her husband should succeed her as postmaster at Monticello.

Mr. Kennedy has, therefore, received the appointment, and it is hoped that his course may serve as an example to all single men who shall hereafter attempt to supersede widows in public office. How finely this southern gallantry contrasts with the case of the man who in the rush for land at Lawton crowded ahead of the Kansas telephone girl.

A cheer for the postmaster who married the widow to get her office.

Dot, the Miner's Daughter.

Buy your tickets early and avoid the rush. "Dot, the Miner's Daughter" will be here only one night, and that will be Tuesday night, September 10th. This is a four-act drama, put on the stage by the Senior class of the High-School, and no detail has been overlooked to furnish an entertainment that will be at once a delight to those who attend and an effort of which the class may well be proud. It is confidently expected—and with good reason—that there will be a large turn-out to this engagement, since good plays are a very rare occurance in Red Lake Falls, and especially when it is remembered that some of the best plays in the past have been furnished by local talent. Some idea of the scope of the play may be gained by a knowledge of the fact that there are in it fourteen characters, among whom the different parts are generously distributed. It will afford the citizens of Red Lake Falls another opportunity to attest their appreciation of our High School by turning out en masse. The cast of characters and a brief synopsis of the play were published in The Gazette last week. The Red Lake Falls Philharmonic Society will furnish music, and will render the following pieces:

1. March......"Iowa State Band"
2. Overture..."Jubilee-Potpourri"
3. Overture."Pictures of the Past"
4. Selection ....Selected
5. Overture......."Golden Eagle"
6. March......."Merry Monarch"

Welland-Kloss.

Tuesday morning at 10:30 at St. Mary's church, was solemnized the marriage of Miss Mary Kloss, of this city, to Mr. Nicholas Welland, of Belgium township, Polk county, the Rev. Fr. The bride is the popular young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Englebret Kloss, of this city, and a great favorite with her friends. The groom is a prosperous farmer of his township and quite well known in this city. The Gazette sends congratulations and best wishes.

Leblance-Quesnell.

At the parsonage of the Rev. E. Fayolle last evening at 6:30 occurred the marriage of Miss Milvina Quesnell, of this city, to Mr. Adolph Leblance, of Turtle River. The bride is the pretty young grand daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Levi Miller and has only been a resident for a short time, coming here from Duluth about a year ago. The groom is quite favorably known, having made his home here for about six months, several years ago when he was tending bar for John Turcotte. He now has a store and hotel at Turtle River, where the happy couple will make their future home.

The Gazette joins with the rest in giving congratulations and good wishes.

Astounded The Editor.

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bennettsville, S. C., was once immensely surprised. "Through long suffering from Dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength or vigor and suffered great distress from her stomach, but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well, can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid liver." For indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Stomach and Liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50c at W. A. Schraiter's.

Dot, the Miner's Daughter.

Buy your tickets early and avoid the rush. "Dot, the Miner's Daughter" will be here only one night, and that will be Tuesday night, September 10th. This is a four-act drama, put on the stage by the Senior class of the High School, and no detail has been overlooked to furnish an entertainment that will be at once a delight to those who attend and an effort of which the class may well be proud. It is confidently expected—and with good reason—that there will be a large turn-out to this engagement, since good plays are a very rare occurance in Red Lake Falls, and especially when it is remembered that some of the best plays in the past have been furnished by local talent. Some idea of the scope of the play may be gained by a knowledge of the fact that there are in it fourteen characters, among whom the different parts are generously distributed. It will afford the citizens of Red Lake Falls another opportunity to attest their appreciation of our High School by turning out en masse. The cast of characters and a brief synopsis of the play were published in The Gazette last week. The Red Lake Falls Philharmonic Society will furnish music, and will render the following pieces:

1. March......"Iowa State Band"
2. Overture...."Jubilee-Potpourri"
3. Overture."Pictures of the Past"
4. Selection..................Selected
5. Overture......."Golden Eagle"
6. March......."Merry Monarch"

Weiland-Kloss.

Tuesday morning at 10:30 at St. Mary's church, was solemnized the marriage of Miss Mary Kloss, of this city, to Mr. Nicholas Weiland, of Belgium township, Polk county, the Rev. Fr. Ansgar officiating. The bride was attended by Miss Mary Wagner, and Philip Weiland, a brother of the groom, acted as "best man." After the ceremony the happy couple prepared to the home of the bride's parents, were an elaborate dinner was served to the immediate relatives of the contracting parties, after which Mr. and Mrs. Weiland left for the groom's farm in Belgium township, where they will make their future home.

The bride is the popular young daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Englebret Kloss, of this city, and a great favorite with her friends. The groom is a prosperous farmer of his township and quite well known in this city.

The Gazette sends congratulations and best wishes.

Leblance-Quesnell.

At the parsonage of the Rev. E. Fayolle last evening at 6:30 occurred the marriage of Miss Milvina Quesnell, of this city, to Mr. Adolph Leblance, of Turtle River. The bride is the pretty young grand daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Levi Miller and has only been a resident for a short time, coming here from Duluth about a year ago. The groom is quite favorably known, having made his home here for about six months, several years ago when he was tending bar for John Turcotte. He now has a store and hotel at Turtle River, where the happy couple will make their future home.

The Gazette joins with the rest in giving congratulations and good wishes.

Astounded The Editor:

Editor S. A. Brown, of Bennetteville, S. C., was once immensely surprised. "Through long suffering from Dyspepsia," he writes, "my wife was greatly run down. She had no strength or vigor and suffered great distress from her stomach, but she tried Electric Bitters which helped her at once, and, after using four bottles, she is entirely well, can eat anything. It's a grand tonic, and its gentle laxative qualities are splendid for torpid livers." For indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Stomach and Liver troubles it's a positive, guaranteed cure. Only 50c at W. A. Schreiter's.

TO SELL THEIR LAND

FOND DU LAC INDIANS ANXIOUS TO DISPOSE OF THEIR TIMBER HOLDINGS.

Million Dollar Realty Deal in Polk County—Storm Damage at Minneapolis Last Week Aggregates $125,000. Attempt to Wreck a Train Near New Ulm—State News in General.

Duluth, Aug. 30.—The Indians of the Fond du Lac reservation, near this city, are asking that the reservation be opened to public settlement. There are about 100,000 acres in this reserve and about 700 Chippewa Indians live there. Nearly every family has taken land in severalty and the reds are living like white men and citizens. It is this that has caused them to make the unusual request that their lands be opened to the whites. All their pine timber has been cut and there is nothing left but hard woods and cedar. In order that their severalty lands be fit for cultivation they must be cleared, but under the law the Indians are unable to sell any of this timber. They cannot, therefore, clear the lands and make farms.

Washington, Sept. 1.—The Indian office has not been officially advised of any desire on the part of the Fond du Lac Indians of Minnesota to sell their lands from which the pine timber has already been removed, and on which there now remains nothing but oak and hard woods.

Under the law these Indians are not permitted to sell their timber lands, and the only way in which a sale can be effected is through a treaty between the government and the Indians, which in turn must be ratified by congress to become operative.

In case this matter is brought to the attention of the Indian office steps will probably be taken looking to drawing up a treaty which will provide for the purchase outright of these lands by the government at an agreed price per acre, the government in turn to sell the lands as it would dispose of other timbered portions of the public domain. The funds paid by the government would be placed to the credit of the Indians to be paid in part or in whole, according to the terms of the treaty.

IMMENSE LAND DEAL.

Upwards of Sixty Thousand Acres Are Transferred.

Taylors Falls, Minn., Aug. 29.—One of the largest real estate transactions in this section is now being made in Polk county. What is commonly known as the Star Land and Lumber company, owning extensive tracts of hardwood lands and a sawmill at Butternut lake, is transferring its holdings to a new company, headed by a Mr. Johnson, who, with his associates, is now examining the property.

General Manager Pennington of the Soo road was one of the principals of the Star company and the extension of the Soo road from St. Croix Falls, 26 miles northeast, was for the purpose of reaching this timber and developing that section. The road is graded, ready for the iron.

There are upwards of 60,000 acres included in the deal, and the timber on much of it is valued at $26 an acre. All is good farming and meadow land. The purchase price is said to be close to $1,000,000.

STORM LOSS INCREASES.

Damage at Minneapolis Sunday Will Reach $125,000.

Minneapolis, Aug. 29.—The damage done by the terrific wind, rain and hail storm in Minneapolis Sunday evening was much greater than at first supposed. A conservative estimate would place the damage at $126,000. This represents hundreds of losers. The great majority of losers are persons at whose homes or places of business window glass was broken. Very many church windows, some of them expensive memorial windows, were damaged.

The most important single item is at the Great Northern grain elevator at Lyndale avenue north. The building was damaged to an extent that will require $30,000 to $40,000 to repair, and wheat stored in the elevator was damaged to an extent that will probably bring the total damage to $45,000 or $50,000.

PLACED TIES ON THE TRACK.

Attempt to Wreck a Passenger Train Near New Ulm, Minn.

New Ulm, Minn., Sept. 2.—For the third time within a year an attempt has been made to wreck trains on the Minneapolis and St. Louis road south of New Ulm. Each time ties have been placed along the track in the night. At an early hour the northbound passenger ran into a pile between this city and Searles, the first station south. Within a mile the fireman, who walked ahead of the train, found other piles of ties.

FAILED TO DO ITS DUTY.

Steamer Alex McDougall Fined $1,000 by the Port Collector.

Duluth, Sept. 3.—Port Collector Willcutts has fined the steamer Alex McDougall $1,000 for not stopping to assist the passengers of the ferryboat Steuber, which the steamer recently sank at Fort Gratiot. Captain Kilby explains that he got his boat out of the way quickly to give the small craft nearby an opportunity to perform that service. The law does not recognize wise action of that kind. The fine may be remitted by the treasury department.

Northwestern Flour Output.

Minneapolis, Aug. 29.—According to The Northwestern Miller the flour output at Minneapolis last week was 314,475 barrels, as compared with 312,786 barrels for the corresponding week last year. Duluth and Superior ground 14,170 barrels, an increase of 5,000 barrels over last year. Domestic trade was very good and nearly every one of the mills sold its output. Some business was transacted with foreigners, but as a rule their bids were still out of line.

GRAIN RATE LIFTED.

Protest of Minneapolis Millers to Some Extent Remied.

St. Paul, Sept. 2.—The Twin City-Chicago lines met at the Omaha building to take action on the request of the Minneapolis millers for relief from the present discrimination against flour rates, in behalf of wheat.

The railroads agreed to increase the grain rate, Minneapolis to Chicago, from 6 to 7 1-2 cents.

They claim that the increase of 1 1-2 cents will relieve the discrimination, and put flour for export on a more equitable basis.

While this is true, to some extent, it will probably not satisfy the millers.

The railroads claim that by a recent ruling of the interstate commerce commission, they are permitted to hold grain rates 2 cents lower than flour rates.

The 7 1-2 cent rate will apply to all lake ports.

From the Twin Cities to the head of the lakes the rate will be 4 1-2 cents.

TO INSPECT LAND.

Interior Department Is Looking Up Swamp Property.

Duluth, Aug. 29.—The interior department will make a careful inspection of the swamp lands in the Duluth and other Minnesota land districts, and will determine whether or not these lands are really swamp and as such are the property of the state in equity as well as fact. If they are not then the government will doubtless institute proceedings to recover any such lands as are found to have become the property of the state without right. A. D. Thorp and a party of associates and assistants will have charge of the work, which will commence at once and proceed continuously to a finish.

LED A RIOT AT NOME.

Minneapolis Men in Trouble as a Result.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 30.—George S. Canfield and James Griffith of Minneapolis, at the head of 65 determined men, armed and masked, on Aug. 15, attempted to take possession of the California fractional bench near Nome.

In the riot which followed one man was shot and last advices say that he will probably die.

Canfield, Griffith and 11 others were placed under arrest by the United States marshals, but later both the Minneapolis men were released on $10,000 bail.

The raid was the result of litigation over the property.

Heavy Immigration Predicted.

St. Paul, Aug. 29.—Information secured by immigration agents of the Northern coast lines is ground for a prediction that the spring movement of 66,000 settlers to North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Washington will be exceeded next spring by 20 per cent. Reports of the satisfactory crops throughout the West have greatly stimulated inquiry for land and opportunities for stock, fruit and grain ventures.

Tax Frauds Alleged.

St. Paul, Aug. 30.—James H. Burns, a former county auditor and prominent Democratic politician, has been arrested on a complaint sworn to by County Treasurer Metzdorf, charging him with obtaining $136.33 from Ramsey county under false pretenses. The money, it is alleged, was obtained on a refundment of a tax certificate which he did not own, and which is still outstanding.

Minnesota Teacher Killed.

Red Wing, Minn., Aug. 28.—Professor F. V. Hubbard, superintendent of public schools here, was killed during the afternoon. He was filling up his back yard with a wheel scraper. In attempting to work the lever it sprang up and struck him in the neck, causing instant death. He was 46 years old.

HOLDUP ON A TRAIN.

Five Masked Men Rob Three Others Near Hudson, Wis.

Hudson, Wis., Aug. 30.—A genuine case of holdup occurred on freight train No. 83, bound for St. Paul. Fred Russler, Rubin Keller and Leo Keller, all of Prairie du Sac., Wis., were in a box car going to Montana. At Eau Claire five young men dressed in dark clothes and slouch hats got into the car and said they were going to St. Paul. Shortly after the train left Knapp one of the men lit a candle and each of the five held revolvers on the three men from Prairie du Sac, two of whom were in one end of the car among some machinery and the other opposite them.

The five had handkerchiefs around their faces below their eyes and gave their orders like old hands. The sum of $54 was taken from the boys, together with two gold watches and chains.

WYOMING OIL FIELDS.

Considerable Excitement in Eastern Part of State.

Deadwood, S. D., Sept. 3.—Indications are that there will be much excitement soon in the oil fields of Eastern Wyoming, next to the line of the Black Hills. In the past few days several prominent mining men from Lawrence county have been making investigations and have taken up land and are preparing to sink wells. The surface in the district is just right for oil, the sandstone and shales being impregnated with it. The oil makes an excellent quality of lubricants. The best district is near New Castle and Cambria.

NUGGETS OF COPPER.

Farmer Finds Several Specimens on His Land.

Osceola, Wis., Sept. 1.—While John W. Nelson and his son William were quarrying rock on his farm one mile southeast of town, they found several fine specimens of pure copper fully as large as an ordinary sized hickory nut. They say there are many other copper indications in the quarry, and believe if there was an expert on the ground a good copper deposit might be found.

"I have gone 14 days at a time without a movement of the bowels, not being able to move them except by using hot water injections. Chronic constipation for seven years placed me in this terrible condition: during that time I did everything I heard of but never found any relief: such was my case until I began using CASCARETS. TO SELL THEIR LAND

FOND DU LAC INDIANS ANXIOUS TO DISPOSE OF THEIR TIMBER HOLDINGS.

Million Dollar Realty Deal in Polk Conuty—Storm Damage at Minneapolis Last Week Aggregates $125,000. Attempt to Wreck a Train Near New Ulm—State News in General.

Duluth, Aug. 30.—The Indians of the Fond du Lac reservation, near this city, are asking that the reservation be opened to public settlement. There are about 100,000 acres in this reserve and about 700 Chippewa Indians live there. Nearly every family has taken land in severalty and the reds are living like white men and citizens. It is this that has caused them to make the unusual request that their lands be opened to the whites. All their pine timber has been cut and there is nothing left but hard woods and ceder. In order that their severalty lands be fit for cultivation they must be cleared, but under the law the Indians are unable to sell any of this timber. They cannot, therefore, clear the lands and make farms.

Washington, Sept. 1.—The Indian office has not been officially advised of any desire on the part of the Fond du Lac Indians of Minnesota to sell their lands from which the pine timber has already been removed, and on which there now remains nothing but oak and hard woods.

Under the law these Indians are not permitted to sell their timber lands, and the only way in which a sale can be effected is through a treaty between the government and the Indians, which in turn must be ratified by congress to become operetive.

In case this matter is brought to the attention of the Indian office steps will probably be taken looking to drawing up a treaty which will provide for the purchase outright of these lands by the government at an agreed price per acre, the government in turn to sell the lands as it would dispose of other timbered portions of the public domain. The funds paid by the government would be placed to the credit of the Indians to be paid in part or in whole, according to the terms of the treaty.

IMMENSE LAND DEAL.

Upwards of Sixty Thousand Acres Are Transferred.

Taylors Falls, Minn., Aug. 29.—One of the largest real estate transactions in this section is now being made in Polk county. What is commonly known as the Star Land and Lumber company, owning extensive tracts of hardwood lands and a sawmill at Butternut lake, is transferring its holdings to a new company, headed by a Mr. Johnson, who, with his associates, is now examining the property.

General Manager Pennington of the Soo road was one of the principals of the Star company and the extension of the Soo road from St. Croix Falls, 25 miles northeast, was for the purpose of reaching this timber, and developing that section. The road is graded, ready for the iron.

There are upwards of 60,000 acres included in the deal, and the timber on much of it is valued at $25 an acre. All is good farming and meadow land. The purchase price is said to be close to $1,000,000.

STORM LOSS INCREASES.

Damage at Minneapolis Sunday Will Reach $125,000.

Minneapolis, Aug. 29.—The damage done by the terrific wind, rain and hail storm in Minneapolis Sunday evening was much greater than at first supposed. A conservative estimate would place the damage at $126,000. This represents hundreds of losers. The great majority of losers are persons at whose homes or places of business window glass was broken. Very many church windows, some of them expensive memorial windows, were damaged.

The most important single item is at the Great Northern grain elevator at Lyndale avenue north. The building was damaged to an extent that will require $30,000 to $40,000 to repair, and wheat stored in the elevator was damaged to an extent that will probably bring the total damage to $46,000 or $50,000.

PLACED TIES ON THE TRACK.

Attempt to Wreck a Passenger Train Near New Ulm, Minn.

New Ulm, Minn., Sept. 2.—For the third time within a year an attempt has been made to wreck trains on the Minneapolis and St. Louis road south of New Ulm. Each time ties have been placed along the track in the night. At an early hour the northbound passenger ran into a pile between this city and Searles, the first station south. Within a mile the fireman, who walked ahead of the train, found other piles of ties.

FAILED TO DO ITS DUTY.

Steamer Alex McDougall Fined $1,000 by the Port Collector.

Duluth, Sept. 3.—Port Collector Willcutts has fined the steamer Alex McDougall $1,000 for not stopping to assist the passengers of the ferryboat Steuber, which the steamer recently sank at Fort Gratiot. Captain Kilby explains that he got his boat out of the way quickly to give the small craft nearby an opportunity to perform that service. The law does not recognize wise action of that kind. The fine may be remitted by the treasury department.

Northwestern Flour Output.

Minneapolis, Aug. 29.—According to The Northwestern Miller the flour output at Minneapolis last week was 314,475 barrels, as compared with 312,785 barrels for the corresponding week last year. Duluth and Superior ground 14,170 barrels, an increase of 5,000 barrels over last year. Domestic trade was very good and nearly every one of the mills sold its output. Some business was transacted with foreigners, but as a rule their bids were still out of line.

GRAIN RATE LIFTED.

Protest of Minneapolis Millers to Some Extent Remied.

St. Paul, Sept. 2.—The Twin City-Chicago lines met at the Omaha building to take action on the request of the Minneapolis millers for relief from the present discrimination against flour rates, in behalf of wheat.

The railroads agreed to increase the grain rate, Minneapolis to Chicago, from 6 to 7 1-2 cents.

They claim that the increase of 1 1-2 cents will relieve the discrimination, and put flour for export on a more equitable basis.

While this is true, to some extent, it will probably not satisfy the millers.

The railroads claim that by a recent ruling of the interstate commerce commission, they are permitted to hold grain rates 2 cents lower than flour rates.

The 7 1-2 cent rate will apply to all lake ports.

From the Twin Cities to the head of the lakes the rate will be 4 1-2 cents.

TO INSPECT LAND.

Interior Department Is Looking Up Swamp Property.

Duluth, Aug. 29.—The interior department will make a careful inspection of the swamp lands in the Duluth and other Minnesota land districts, and will determine whether or not these lands are really swamp and as such are the property of the state in equity as well as fact. If they are not then the government will doubtless institute proceedings to recover any such lands as are found to have become the property of the state without right. A. D. Thorp and a party of associates and assistants will have charge of the work, which will commence at once and proceed continuously to a finish.

LED A RIOT AT NOME.

Minneapolis Men in Trouble as a Result.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 30.—George S. Canfield and James Griffith of Minneapolis, at the head of 65 determined men, armed and masked, on Aug. 15, attempted to take possession of the California fractional bench near Nome.

In the riot which followed one man was shot and last advices say that he will probably die.

Canfield, Griffith and 11 others were placed under arrest by the United States marshals, but later both the Minneapolis men were released on $10,000 bail.

The raid was the result of litigation over the property.

Heavy Immigration Predicted.

St. Paul, Aug. 29.—Information secured by immigration agents of the Northern coast lines is ground for a prediction that the spring movement of 66,000 settlers to North Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Oregon and Washington will be exceeded next spring by 20 per cent. Mrs. J. E. Shields left Monday after a six weeks visit with friends and relatives here. She will visit a brother in Fisher for a few days before returning to her home in Chicago.

S. J. Swanson, Wylie agent for the Red Lake Falls Milling Co., who by his "Mascot" and "Straight" is filling so many hungry mouths as well as his own, was the early bird in getting new wheat threshed two weeks ago.

A jolly set of East Side young people took a moonlight excursion to the city of Wylie Saturday night, to spend a few happy hours with Oliver and Ole Romsos. They returned in the wee hours of the morning—went over in August and returned in September.

Crop prospects are at present not very good here. Wheat will generally turn out poorly, the head not being well filled. The straw was on many fields broken down from 25 to 50 per cent by what has been termed the Hessian fly. Oats will not be as good as expected neither in quantity nor quality.

BRIDGIE.

A NEW TOWN IN ITASCA COUNTY OF WHICH MUCH IS EXPECTED.

ON THE LINE OF THE MINNESOTA & INTERNATIONAL RAILROAD.

The wonderful growth of Blackduck, where a village of 600 inhabitants sprung up in a few weeks during last winter, bids fair to be duplicated at Bridgie, a town 15 miles northeast of Blackduck and on the line of the Minnesota and International railway which is completed as far as Tenstrike, and which it is expected will reach Blackduck in a month or six weeks.

Four years ago when Bemidji, now a city of some 3,500 inhabitants, sprung into prominence, it was the opinion of the wise-acres that the place "founded on sand" would amount to nothing. Perhaps the growth of Bemidji will not continue at the rapid pace heretofore maintained, but the hopes of the city's most sanguine friends have long since been realized. It is estimated that no less than $1,000,000 annually is left there by the "lumber-jacks" alone. Those making their headquarters there number about 10,000.

The new town of Bridgie is fortunate in that it has the backing of the lumber firm of Backus & Brooks, of Minneapolis, who owned one third interest in the Brainerd & Northern, and who are supposed to have a like interest in its extension, the Minnesota and & International.

Blackduck we described in a former article. This place will soon be enjoying all modern conveniences, and may be the terminus of the road this winter, although it is probable, if Foley Bros. secure the contract for the construction work to Bridgie, they will push it through to that point this winter. This is what the Bridgie people are hoping for, but whether it is done or not, there will be a big boom for that town "when it freezes up." The fact is, the cost at getting in there now is prohibitive. The regular charge, for toting from Turtle has been $3.00 per hundred, but as soon as sleighing comes, access will be easy and the price will drop. It is then that the rush to Bridgie will begin. Unless all signs fail a splendid town will grow up there. With rail communication, the vast wealth in pine and hardwood will become available. To Bridgie from Blackduck by the wagon road is 28 miles. Traversing this road, it is soon manifest that the conditions change rapidly. The soil, which is productive and good, becomes wonderfully rich, and it is doubtful if the Valley of the Nile itself could show up better. About ten miles out, on the Cormorant river, is a cluster of settlers who have taken up agricultural lands, and are opening up fine farms. Here poplar timber predominates. There is but little pine, and along the river is afforded splendid meadow. Already some fine farms are seen. A little further up begins the spruce, cedar and hardwood territory, and these strips are intermingled with rich pine forests. The wealth of one of these 160 acre tracts is hard to estimate. At present settlers are selling their pine to lumbermen for $3.50 per thousand on the stump. The roads for heavy loads are indescribably bad, yet considerable freighting is done. The roads are cut out through the forest, just sufficiently wide to allow of the passing of wagons. With a load it is impossible to travel more than two miles an hour. On the road from Blackduck to Bridgie are just ten inhabited houses, and six of these are in a bunch near the Cormorant river crossing. There is a postoffice at Bridgie, which was established 9 years ago. Bridget Moore, a young lady, whose brothers were thereabouts, was appointed postmistress and the place was named for her. She conducted a stopping place, and remained for seven years. Two years ago she left, and C. W. Field, the present official, was appointed postmaster, and he conducts the inn and a general store in connection. The townsite as platted is 4½ miles from the post office, and it is likely that the new town will not be named Bridgie, inasmuch as the old post-office will not be moved, the department having decided upon this after a strong protest against its removal was sent in signed by many of the patrons. At Bridgie we are in the wilds of Itasca county, but which will soon be transformed into an eldorado, by the magic power of the iron horse, bringing with it the touch of the great outside world which has for years seemed so inaccessible to the few people who lived long enough in the lonely pine country to prove up and get out again.

The town of New Bridgie is platted on the shore of Bartlet lake, one of the many beautiful sheets of water for which Minnesota is famous. The waters sparkle through the forest and the guests at hotel Bancroft or hotel Grindel, the two leading places of New Bridgie, have a delightful view of the gem of the forest.

Lumbering operations on an immense scale are to be commenced by Backus & Brooks this winter, and Bridgie will be the headquarters. Settlers will commence logging their claims, and the era of prosperity will dawn on the new town irrisistibly this winter.

The number of people going back and forth through the wilds of Itasca county is great. Only one or two roads furnish the artery for the traffic of a section that is like an empire in its vastness, and one is surprised at the number of persons met in a days' travel. It is said that not only does this section furnish a wealth of pine and hardwood, besides rich soil, but that indications of mineral are very pronounced. We met two prospectors during a recent visit there who had seen sufficient to convince them that coal existed in abundance, and that there was a strong probability of iron ore. This in the district immediately tributary to Bridgie. The advent of the railroad will serve to tear down the barriers that have kept out capital to utilize the vast resources of this great region, and almost anything may be expected in the line of progress and development there now and without delay.

In the midst of this colossal richness and natural resources is the town of New Bridgie, and all are unanimous in predicting for her a brilliant and meteoric career, and a prosperity which will be permanent.

Dot, The Miner's Daughter.

This splendid drama was presented Tuesday night at the opera house by members of the Senior Class of the High School assisted by a few outsiders. A crowded house greeted the actors as the curtain went up for Act 1, and the audience was enthusiastic and appreciative. From start to finish the performance went off without a hitch, and all present say it was one of the very best amateur performances ever given here. It would be impossible to say on whom the greatest honors fell, but some of the parts were heavy, and those assuming them deserve especial credit for the manner in which they were handled. The cast of characters showed that considerable discrimination and good judgement had been used in its make up by those in charge of the affair. The receipts go to the school fund and were quite satisfactory. A neatly gotten up advertising program added $25.00 to the income, while the receipts for tickets sold was $49.10, making a total of $74.10.

I desire to make apology to the Philharmonic Society for omitting, in my brief remarks before the curtains on the evening of the play, to express appreciation for the admirable music furnished by it, which was in order when it is known that this music was furnished gratuitously. I was requested by members of the class just before the curtains rose, so that the remarks were entirely impromptu, to make the announcement that with the act that was to follow the play would be concluded, and to thank the audience for their liberal patronage. It did not occur to the class at the time to suggest it, and it was my mistake not to include it; but I have since been told by members of the class that it was their intention to make public acknowledgment of their appreciation of the part taken by the orchestra in this play through the local papers, which absolves them from all fault in the premises. The mistake was my own, for which reason it gives me pleasure to make this public apology.

IMPROVED SERVICE.

THE GREAT NORTHERN WILL PUT ON A DAILY PASSENGER TRAIN.

THE NEW SERVICE WILL BE INAUGURATED NEXT MONDAY.

Hon. Marcus Johnson came up from St. Paul Monday with good news. On Saturday he had been called into the office of General Passenger Agent F. I. Whitney and 2d Vice President Miller of the Great Northern, and after going over the ground the officials assured him that the regular passenger train would be put on, probably beginning on Monday, the 16th inst. Mr. Johnson says the company intends to give this branch a splendid equipment, and will arrange the time schedule to make connections at Crookston with the trains on the main line, probably leaving Crookston at nine, after the arrival of the Duluth bound train, and returning in time to connect with the west bound train, at 4:49 in the afternoon.

There are few shippers in this section who have more intimate business relations with the Great Northern officials than has Mr. Johnson, with his line of elevators, and flour mills at Red Lake Falls, Willmar and other points in this district. He has been unceasing in his efforts, which have been of almost weekly repetition, to secure an improvement in the train service, and is naturally much gratified.

It has not been given out whether the train will come to Red Lake Falls first, or go to Thief River Falls, but this matter was still under advisement when Mr. Johnson's consultation with the officials ended.

It has been a disagreeable thing to get in and out of Red Lake Falls in the past. Starting at Crookston at 8:25 a. m. the weary traveler destined for this point would be landed at St. Hilaire for a long wait while the train went to Thief River Falls and back, finally, at 1:55 o'clock p. m., reaching Red Lake Falls, having consumed five hours and twenty minutes in making a distance of twenty-two miles, having come up on a mixed train, with a time table so arranged that the crew could handle the heavy freight business at all points reached.

The mixed train service will probably be continued on the old schedule. This will give the people on this branch such a service as the importance of their business interests warrant.

Improvements.

With the improvements already made on the electric light plant, and those now in progress on the mill, the Red Lake Falls Milling Company will expend $15,000 this season. Yesterday the new dynamo which is run by a 150-horse power engine, was put into operation in the splendid brick power house just erected, and the capacity of the plant will be sufficient for years to come.

The flour mill is now closed down, pending improvements to the flume and turbines, which will be completed within a few days, so as to put the mill in readiness for the fall rush.

NEWS OF [illegible] WEEK

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT McKINLEY.

President McKinley was shot twice by an assassin as he stood in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American exposition, Buffalo, at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. The shots were fired by Leon Czolgosz, who said afterward that he was an anarchist and had only done his duty. The attempted assassination took place in the presence of 5,000 people who had crowded into the Temple of Music and while 10,000 others stood outside the temple waiting for a chance to enter and shake hands with the president. One of the bullets struck the sternum in the president's chest, deflected to the right and traveled beneath the skin to a point directly below the right nipple. The second bullet penetrated the abdomen. Only a superficial wound was caused by the first bullet, and within five minutes after the physicians reached the president it had been removed. The second bullet was not found. An operation was performed on the president at the emergency hospital on the exposition grounds by Dr. Matthew D. Mann, Dr. John Parmenter and Dr. Herman Mynter. The president's stomach was opened, but the bullet was not found. Drainage tubes were inserted, the incision was sewed up, and at 7:45 o'clock the president was removed to the home of John G. Milburn. The doctors stated after the operation that they were hopeful, and that while the wound caused by the second shot was serious it was not necessarily fatal.

Mrs. McKinley is bearing up well and her physician believes the shock will have no serious results.

Five anarchists have been arrested at Chicago in connection with the attempted assassination of President McKinley.

Latest bulletins regarding the president's condition are highly satisfactory and physicians are hopeful of his eventual recovery.

Leon Czolgosz, who shot President McKinley at Buffalo Friday, was born in Detroit and went to Buffalo from Cleveland a week or so ago.

London newspapers and public men expressed great sorrow and indignation at the shooting of President McKinley. A similar feeling is general on the Continent.

The anarchists of Paterson, N. J., are greatly excited over the attempted assassination of President McKinley. The general feeling among them is against the deed and the man who tried to commit the murder.

The news of the shooting of President McKinley caused a tremendous sensation in Washington. Mr. McKinley's delightful personality had endeared him to the citizens of Washington, apart from the official class, in a degree that rarely has been equalled.

It is the opinion of the secret service officials at Washington that the shooting of the president is an outcropping, in some obscure way, of the Haymarket riots, and that it will be found eventually that the would-be assassin has some connection with the group of persons associated in the Chicago anarchists riot.

A large number of Boer women have been given permission to go to their husbands in the field to attempt to persuade them to surrender, but it appears that the women merely desire to see their husbands and have no intention of trying to get them to lay down their arms, and often give them valuable information.

NEWSPAPER MAN'S MISTAKE.

He Sent Vice President Hobart's Card to a Senator Instead of His Own.

A Baltimore newspaper man once came over to Washington to do some interviewing of public men, says a Washington correspondent of the Philadelphia North American. It was when Garret A. Hobart was vice president, and he called upon that distinguished New Jerseyan first. Then, with fear and trembling, he went to the residence of a senator who was noted for frigidity toward representatives of the press. He sent up his card and expected to be sent a curt refusal to be seen. What was his astonishment when the lackey came downstairs, bowed profoundly and said that Senator So-and-So would be down in just a minute, and would he be so good as to make himself at home meanwhile. In less than that time the statesman came down the staircase at a pace that made the reporter fear for the safety of his limbs.

"Ah! Mr. Hobart, delighted to see you," he said, as he entered, with his hand outstretched, and before his eyes had become accustomed to the darkened parlor. Then, of a sudden, he drew himself up stiffly, fumbled in his waistcoat, pulled out the card that had been sent to him, and demanded: "What do you mean by this imposition, sir?" Like lightning it flashed on the newspaper man what had happened. He had, while in the vice president's room, inadvertently picked up one of Mr. Hobart's cards and had used it by mistake for one of his own. His apologies were ample, but the senator could not be induced to forgive that thrilling dash down the slippery staircase simply to accommodate a mere scribbler.

MUST CARE FOR THEIR OWN.

Parents in the State of Ohio Are Held Responsible for Their Children's Support.

The Ohio legislature at its last session passed a law attaching a penalty of a term in the penitentiary for parents who refuse to support their offspring. The first conviction under this law is reported from Columbus.

It appears that a miner named Raby was making good wages, but he could not be induced by the authorities to support his only child. Some months ago he separated from his wife, and he made a fight for the possession of the child and was successful. As he was not prepared to properly provide for the child, it was taken to the children's home to be cared for. When the child was left there it was the distinct understanding that he was to pay a certain stipend for the services. He failed to comply with his contract, and all the urging of the county officers had no effect in inducing him to let loose of his purse strings to pay for the necessaries of life for his child. After a large number of admonitions he was arrested and the court sentenced him to serve one year. In April, 1890, the general assembly passed a law attaching a workhouse sentence for cases of that kind, but the law was amended by the last legislature, and the penitentiary was substituted for the workhouse.

PRETTY MARRIAGE CUSTOM.

It Was Inaugurated by Queen Victoria and Has Been Copied by All Her Children.

A pretty custom dating from the wedding of the late Queen Victoria, is that a sprig of myrtle which formed part of the bride's wreath was carefully cultured, and in due time planted out. When the princess royal was married sprigs were sent for her bridal wreath from this myrtle tree. The princess, following her mother's example, had one of the sprigs cared for till it became a full-sized tree, which served for her daughter-in-law's wreath at the wedding of the present emperor of Germany.

The custom was observed in the marriage of the prince of Wales and all other of Queen Victoria's children and grandchildren. There is already, as the result of this charming custom, the making of a grove of myrtle trees. Other customs attached to the marriages of the royal family relate to the bouquet and the wedding cake. Ever since the marriage of Queen Victoria a firm of Windsor florists have had the honor of presenting the one, a Chester confectioner finding the other, neither accepting payment.

Silk Culture a Home Industry.

A writer in the Philadelphia Times says that silk culture is not, and never has been, an exceedingly remunerative business, but it adds vast wealth to the nations engaged in it for the simple reason that it can be pursued by the humblest and poorest, requiring only a small outlay. The raising of a few pounds of cocoons every year does not materially interfere with the household and other duties that now engage the time of the farm girls, and it is by each household raising a few pounds of cocoon that silk culture must be carried on in this country, as it always has been in other countries. In France cocoons are regularly produced by more than 150,000 families.

"Black Death" Still Defiant.

The bubonic plague is said to be the most stubborn of epidemics, not yielding to the most energetic treatment. While the dread of smallpox, cholera and yellow fever has been much lessened of late years because of the progress of medical science, no great hold has yet been obtained on the "black death."

Preventive of Smallpox.

A doctor out west alleges that he has discovered that apple cider vinegar taken in reasonable quantities is a sure preventive of smallpox.

MY CAPTIVE.
BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.
AUTHOR OF A SOLDIER OF MANHATTAN, THE SUN OF SARATOGA ETC.
COPYRIGHT, 1900, BY JOSEPH A. ALTSHELER.

Having made these brave resolutions, I sat down on the stool and leaned my head once more against the wall, not because I was tired and sleepy, but merely that I might reserve my strength for a crisis, the most necessary thing in the world for a soldier, every man of experience knowing that an army fights better if it goes into battle well fed, well clothed and well rested. It was a good argument, that bore extension, and I closed my eyes that they, too, might have rest, for they felt weary and clogged. Then, do what I would or could, weariness and sleep took charge of me. Tired muscles rose in open and defiant rebellion against mind and will. The combat was short and fierce, but matter triumphed over mind, and in five minutes I was in the midst of a sleep that was heavenly with rest, unpeopled by bad dreams, with my head back against the wall and my breathing long and regular. Meanwhile the bed of coals on the hearth grew smaller and paler. The rim of fire narrowed. Coals turned from red to black and then to gray and crumbled into ashes. The darkness crept up to the very edge of the hearthstone and then invaded it. The girl was completely in the shadows, and the pale glimmer of the fire was but a faint light left in the room.

The sleeping man and the sleeping girl were tired, very tired, and they slept soundly. If they had dreams, they were pleasant ones, and no thought of danger entered into them. The men around the campfire had moved away to the other side of the world, and the little cabin was peaceful for them, inside and outside. Sleeping thus, they did not see the men rise from the campfire and approach the hut, now veiled in a darkness which made such a movement safe. They reached the cabin without alarm or a sign from the watcher who was not watching, and at last the leader tried the shutter of the window. He pried at it with his knife and moved it a little. Then he put his ear to the crack and could hear nothing within. Replacing his ear with his eye, he could see the feeble glimmer of the fire and nothing more. He was sure that those whom he wished to take were asleep, and he exulted, for a fierce anger mingled with his other desires to recapture both. He pried again at the window, and with greater leverage it yielded further, and wood scraped against wood. He stopped and listened again, but the inmates of the cabin never stirred.

Putting his ear to the wide crack that now intervened between the shutter and the wall, he listened again and heard the steady, regular breathing of some one inside and below. He knew it was the breathing of a sleeping man, too loud and strong for a woman, too even for one awake, and he reached up and pulled the shutter wide open on its rude leather hinges. Then he grasped the edge of the window with both hands and pulled himself up.

My sleep grew troubled at last and then turned into a nightmare. Some huge wild beast, after the fashion of beasts in nightmares, was sitting on my chest and blowing his breath in my face, while I had no power to move a muscle. I was cold to the marrow and waited for him to devour me, but instead he dwindled away and became misty. With one great effort I threw him off my chest and sprang to my feet. My head struck against somebody else's head as I sprang up, and that somebody else swore an oath that had the savor neither of a nightmare nor a dream, but of reality.

Cold air and moonlight rushed in at the window, but most of the passage was filled up by the shoulders and head of a large man whose face I could not see owing to the imperfect light. He held in his hand a pistol which he fired at me, but now the imperfect light was to my advantage and not his, for his bullet, avoiding me, buried itself with a chuck in the log walls, and the report confined in the small room roared like a cannon shot.

Moved more by impulse and instinct than by thought, I snatched out my own pistol and fired at the head in the window. The man uttered a deep sigh, the body dropped forward and swayed there; I heard the light drip, drip of something on the floor, and then the body fell inside the room.

The girl, suddenly awakened by the terrible sounds and half in a maze, cried out in fright and then began to ask in a high, trembling voice what had happened.

"The British have attacked us," I said. "One of them was in the shadow, and I threw him back. Stand out of the range of the window." I did not want her to see the thing lying on the floor under the window, and I shoved the table in front of it.

She obeyed, for I spoke the last sentence very sharply. The window was wide open, and expecting to see another face there I held my second pistol [illegible] appeared, and I had [illegible] they feared Crowder was dead.

Taking the risk, I reached out an arm, seized the shutter and slammed it shut, securing it as best I could with the leather strap and nail used as a fastening. Then, with my ear near the crevice, I listened, but could not hear our enemies. I feared at first to look out lest I should receive a bullet, but still hearing nothing I applied my eye and saw that the men had gone back to their fire. They were all there—four. I counted them and knew that none was missing. They were deliberating evidently over the fall of their leader and what next to do, and I took an immediate resolution.

"Light the candle," I said to the girl. "Hold it to the fire. There's enough heat left to start the wick to burning."

She did so and saw that something lay behind the table.

"What is that?" she cried.

"The dancer and singer of last night," I replied, seeing that I would have to tell. "The leader of those desperadoes outside came into our fort, but he came into his grave."

She retreated, shuddering, to the farthest corner of the room.

"Now, you do exactly as I say," I continued. "Remember that you are the rank and file of this army, and I am its commander."

"I will obey you," she said.

I quickly reloaded my pistol.

Then I shoved the table away again and, overcoming my repulsion, dragged the dead body to a sitting position. A chill struck into my marrow, but I dragged off the red British coat and, having thrown off my own, put it on. Then I gathered up the wallet of food and Old Put's bridle and took down the bar from the door.

"Come," I said, "we are going to leave this place while they are planning by the fire and their backs are turned to us."

It was a bold measure, involving many risks, but I believed that it would succeed if we kept our courage and presence of mind. For at least two or three minutes they would think I was Crowder, victorious, and that would be worth much. When I had taken down the bar, I stopped a moment.

"Keep by my side," I said. "Remember that we must become separated by no chance. Here, take this pistol! You can shoot, can't you?"

She said "Yes" and took the pistol. Then I opened the door, and we dashed out, running with quick and noiseless steps across the open toward the wood, which rose in a dim line ahead of us.

While the window opened toward the campfire of the besiegers the door did not, and we had gone perhaps 50 yards before they saw us. This I knew by the surprised shout that came to us, and looking back I saw them hesitating, as if in doubt about my identity, and at last running toward their horses. I was glad that they would pursue on horseback, and I had taken that probability into consideration when we made our dash from the house, for even at the distance I could see that the dim wood looked dense and a poor place for the use of horses.

"Courage, Julia!" I said, taking her hand. "In a minute or two we will be into the woods, and they mean safety."

I looked back a second time. The guerrillas had reached their horses, mounted them and turned their heads our way, but in doing it their time lost was our gain. Unless lamed by some unlucky pistol shot we would surely gain the wood. They fired once or twice, and I heard the thunder of their horses' hoofs, but I had little fear. I still held the girl's hand in mine, and she made no effort to draw it away. She was running with a firm, sure step, and, though her face was white and her eye excited, she seemed to retain both her courage and presence of mind.

The wood was not as far as I had calculated, and when our pursuers were many yards away we dashed into it at such headlong haste that I tripped over a vine and fell upon my nose, burying it in a pile of soft leaves, which saved it from harm. But I was up again, rejoicing at the accident, for in a wood interlaced with vines horses could make no progress.

"I hope you are not hurt?" asked Julia anxiously.

"Hurt? Not a bit of it!" I replied. "What a blessing these woods are! How dark it is in here, and what a blessing that is too!"

In fact, the wood was our good luck and our best luck at that, for even we on foot found it difficult to make our way through it. Afar we could hear the British cursing in profusion and variety as they strove to force their horses through the dense bush.

"Hold my hand," I said to Julia, "for otherwise I might lose you in all this darkness and density."

But instead of waiting for her to take my hand, which she might not have done, I took hers, and, bidding her again to step lightly, I led the way, curving among the trees and bushes like a brook winding around the hills in search of a level channel. My object was to leave our pursuers at a loss concerning our course, and we soon ceased to hear their swearing or the struggles of their horses. I dropped into a walk, and of course the girl did likewise.

"I think we are safe now," I said. "There is not one chance in a hundred to bring them across our path again. What a fine wood! What a glorious wood! There is no such wood as this in England. It grew here especially for our safety, Julia."

"It did grow up in time," she replied, "but now that you think us safe again you can call me Miss Howard and not Julia."

"That's true, and now that we are safe again I must ask you, Miss Howard, as an especial favor to me, to please quit holding my hand."

"I am not holding your hand, Mr. Marcel!" she replied indignantly. "It is you who are holding mine, but you shall not do so a moment longer."

She tried to jerk her hand away. I let her jerk three or four times, and then I added as an afterthought:

"It is very dark here, and there is still danger that we might become separated. I think I will let you hold it a little longer, but I shall endure it merely because it is a military necessity."

She gave her hand a most violent jerk, and it nearly slipped from me, but I renewed my grip in time.

"Simply a military necessity," I repeated, and, seeing that it was useless, she made no further effort to withdraw her hand. I could not see her face, the darkness being too great, and therefore had little opportunity to judge of her state of mind. We walked on in silence, winding here and there through the wood, with an occasional stop to listen, though we heard nothing but the common noises of a forest—the crackling rustle of dry leaves and twigs, the gentle swaying of some old tree as the wind rocked it and the soft swish of the bushes as they swung back into place after we had passed between.

CHAPTER VIII.

JULIA'S REVENGE.

We walked for nearly an hour and during the last three-quarters of it kept straight to the northwest, in which direction I thought Morgan, with his little army, lay, or rather marched. At last the bush began to grow thinner and the trees to stand farther apart. I inferred that we were approaching the end of the forest, and I was not sorry, as the traveling was hard, and I believed that we had lost our pursuers. Presently we came into the open, and I let the girl's hand drop.

"Which way are we going now?" she asked.

"Wait a moment," I said.

I put two fingers to my lips and blew between them a whistle, soft and long and penetrating.

"Why do you do that?" asked the girl in a fright, coming toward me. "You will bring them upon us again."

"Wait," I repeated, and I blew the whistle a second time. We stood motionless for two minutes, and then I heard a faint crush, crush, as of approaching footsteps.

"They are coming!" cried the girl, seizing my arm. "Let us run into the wood again."

"Wait," I said for the third time.

The footsteps approached rapidly, and a figure, gigantic and formidable in the gray light, appeared through the trees. The girl cried aloud in a panic of terror and gripped my arm.

"Don't be alarmed, Julia, dear," I said. "See who it is!"

Old Put walked up to me, gave his glad, familiar whinny and rubbed his nose on my disengaged arm. Then he started back, and his eyes flamed with wrath.

"Don't be angry, old comrade," I said. "It is true I wear a red coat, but it is only a disguise, a ruse, and I will get rid of it as soon as I can."

THE TRAGEDY AT BUFFALO.

The whole world eulogizes the great man who lies at death's door today. More popular than Washington or Lincoln were during their incumbency of the presidency, his achievements for mankind will rank with theirs. With not a single enemy it remained for a cowardly weasling, with his brains stuffed and puffed up by the goary utterances of such parasites on law and order as Emma Goldman to attempt the black crime of cutting him down in the very zenith of his fame. And be it noted that, even in the frenzied brain of this vile creature who by the grace of Providence was permitted to parade among us in the livery of man, there was no entertainment of malice against McKinley as a man, but against the government over which McKinley temporarily presided; and that, too, the most liberal and enlightened system of government on the face of the earth. Indeed, it is a grave question whether or not it is not altogether too liberal when it permits the cankerous growth of the red-headed anarchist habitation and residence within its borders.

Strong men bow their heads and weep. His lovable character, kindly, genial and conciliatory spirit, were the forces in his make up which illumined his personality and made the American people, with no regard to party or creed, in turn love and respect him. Those who came in personal contact with him were riviteil to him with bands of steel. Senator Hoar, who bitterly opposed some of the policies of the McKinley administration, long ago paid him this glowing tribute: "To win by gentleness, and not by anger; to win by respect and not by reviling—these are the instruments by which great political accomplishments are brought to pass in our republic. That is the secret of the great success and of the great popularity of President McKinley. No man, friend or foe, differing from him or agreeing with him, has ever been brought into personal contact with him without not only loving him, but also respecting him." North, South, East and West, from the four corners of the earth, come expressions of tender sympathy and earnest prayers for his recovery. His great devotion to his frail and invalid wife has endeared him to the American people and to the lovers of home all the world 'round. His sterling honesty and upright character, his patriotism and lofty conception of duty have inspired them to honor him and confide in him. One of the highest possible tributes paid to President McKinley was that uttered by Lyman J. Gage, secretary of the treasury, who said: "There is not a member of the cabinet but that would rather be in the president's place than that the country should loose the president. He is calm, brave, quiet, high-minded and superior in every respect. Only his cabinet can appreciate, with their five years of close association, what this all means. President McKinley is typical of the highest development of the true American citizen. During the years I have been associated with him I have never heard one word of malice toward any one. He absolutely had no ill feeling to any person. The greatest man of our times, with no love of wealth, honors or power, only wishing to do his duty to his country and his God."

So the American people are unwilling to entertain any other thought but that he shall fully recover, and round out his career as president, and thereafter as a useful citizen of our beloved country. But if worse comes to worse, and we are to suffer the loss of our good president at this time, we may significantly recall the memorable words uttered by Young Garfield, when, on another occasion the bullet of an assassin cut the great Lincoln,—"Fellow citizens, God reigns and the government at Washington still lives."

J. J. HILL TO YOUNG MEN

One of the world's most remarkable men is President J. J. Hill, of the Great Northern road. For years he has employed young men by the thousands, and a large share of his success has resulted from his good judgement of men. He has contributed to the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post an article on "Young Men and Speculation," which contains some remarkable sentences, the golden coin of experience. We take pleasure in publishing a few of them:—

"There is no substitute for hard work in winning success.

There is always an element of chance but it is never the predominating element.

The craze for speculation is more injurious to the prospects of the young men who are carried away by it than is war or pestilence.
